INTRODUCTION.

IN collecting for the first time the various Scottish and English poems relating to one of the most celebrated Knights of the Round Table, it might seem desirable to examine critically the sources whence the history of his exploits has been derived. But the subject is of such vast extent, is involved in so much obscurity, and, moreover, has been discussed with such conflicting theories and assertions, that the limits I here propose to myself will only allow me to state in succinct terms the conclusions which, after a long course of reading, I have arrived at.

The inquiry divides itself into two branches, closely connected together ; the first of which embraces the question of the antiquity of Welsh or Armorican traditions, and the share of Geoffrey of Monmouth in the compilation of the far-famed Brut ; the second includes the history of the ponderous French prose Romances of the Round Table, their authors, and the period of their composition. With regard to the former, it is impossible, I think, for any one, who is not prejudiced, to read the arguments of Ellis, Price, De la Rue, and the Author of "Britannia after the Romans," with the testimonies produced, and not to admit, that previous to the time of Geoffrey a mass of popular traditions relating to Arthur and his chivalry must have existed, and was circulated first by the native bards, and afterwards by the Anglo-Norman minstrels.

On these traditions the earliest Prose Romances appear to have been subsequently based, the materials for which were arranged, embellished, and enlarged by the imagination and invention of the various compilers. It is true that these writers are unanimous in referring to a Latin original, from which they profess to translate; and although the existence of such a work is called in question by Ritson, Scott, and Southey, yet I am not prepared altogether to deny it*. But setting this aside, it appears to me, after a somewhat laborious perusal of the printed editions of these works, compared with existing manuscripts, that they must have been compiled in the following order.—1. The Roman du Saint Graal, sometimes intitled the Roman de Joseph d'Arimathie, composed by Robert de Borron. In the printed editions this is called the first part of the Saint Graal. 2. The Roman de Merlin, by the same. 3. The Roman de Lancelot du Lac, composed by Walter Map†. 4. The Roman du Quête du Saint Graal, by the same. In the editions this forms the second part. 5. The Roman de la Mort Artus, by the same, and originally distinct, but in the printed editions united to the Lancelot. 6. The first portion of the Roman de Tristan, by Luces, Seigneur de Gast. 7. The conclusion of Tristan, by Helie de Borron; and 8. The Roman de Gyron le Courtois, by the same. Of these the first six were written in the

* Southey writes, "I do not believe that any of these Romances ever existed in Latin.—By whom or for whom could they have been written in that language?" Pref. to Morte d'Arthur, p. xvi. I merely stop to reply, that it is not more unreasonable to suppose a Latin work should have existed on the exploits of Arthur than on those of Charlemagne. I may also add, for the information of those whom it may concern, that I have myself read no less than five Latin romances still existing in manuscript, some of which are of considerable length. Three of these relate to Arthur, Meriadoc, Gawayne, and other British heroes; the fourth is the original of Chaucer's Tale of Constance; and the fifth is the Knight of the Swan.

latter half of the twelfth century, and the remainder in the first half of the thirteenth. To these must be added the metrical romances composed by Chrestien de Troyes, between the years 1170 and 1195, as also the later prose compilations of Rusticien de Pise and his followers, in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries.

Having thus, I trust, successfully pointed out a clue to the labyrinth in which all our writers on early poetry have lost themselves, I shall proceed to consider the history, character, and exploits assigned to our Hero Syr Gawayne in this phalanx of romance authorities; the utility of which in illustrating the Arthurian cycle of fiction will be admitted, perhaps, as a sufficient excuse for the space it may occupy.

Our attention is naturally directed in the first place to the remains of the Welsh bards, but from those at present extant we learn but little. In the Triads we find Gwalchmai, the son of Gwyar, (who is identified with the Walwainus or Galwanus of Geoffrey and the Gauvain of the Anglo-Norman romancers,) recorded as one of the three golden-tongued or eloquent chiefs, whose persuasion none could resist; and in another passage, he is named as one of the three chiefs most courteous to strangers and guests*. There is extant also a dialogue between Gwalchmai and Trystan†, and some of his adventures are preserved in the Red Book of Hergest, in Jesus College, Oxford, but I should apprehend that all of these have been borrowed from the Anglo-Norman romance-writers‡. Certain it is, that the stories in the Ma-

* Thus also in the Roman de Meliadus, when Arthur and his knights are out riding, a stranger comes up, and inquires for the king.—“Et messire Gauvain, qui estoit nouvel chevalier à celluy temps, qui estoit si debonaire et si courtois à toutes choses, que de sa courtoisie alloient parlant les estranges et les privez, respondit, ‘Ouy, sire, veez le la;’ et luy monstra le roy Artus.” f. xv^b, fol. ed. 1528.

† Printed at length in Lady C. Guest’s edition of the Mabinogion, pt. i. p. 118, 8vo, 1839.

‡ Leland says in his Assertio Arthuri, “Melchinus, vates Britannicus, Gallovini celebrat nomen.” Collectan., v. 24; and Bale adds, that this Melchin wrote De Arthuri mensa rotunda.

binogion referred to by Owen and others as proofs of the antiquity of the British traditions respecting Gawayne, are only translations of the Chevalier au Lion and the Perceval le Gallois. Turning therefore to Geoffrey of Monmouth, whose history was finished about the year 1138*, and, consequently, at least twenty years earlier than the presumed date of any Anglo-Norman romance on the Round Table, we collect the following particulars.

Walwainus was the eldest son of Loth, sovereign of the province of Lothian and the adjacent territories, including the Orkneys, by Anna†, half-sister of Arthur. At the age of twelve years he was sent by his uncle to Rome, and delivered to the charge of Pope Sulpicius, from whom he received knighthood‡. The next mention of him occurs as one of the chiefs who accompanied Arthur to France, to encounter the Romans. He is sent§ with two others to treat with the emperor Lucius Tiberius, and purposely, to provoke a war, he cuts off the head of the emperor's nephew. In the decisive battle which shortly afterwards took place near Langres, he held with Hoel the joint command of the fourth division of Arthur's forces, and his prowess contributed

See what is said of his work on Glastonbury by the former, De Scriptt. Britannicis, vol. i. p. 41; and compare Collectanea, iv. 153, with the work of John of Glastonbury, published by Hearne, 8vo, 1726, vol. i. pp. 30, 55.

* See Dr. Lloyd's letter to Price, in Owen's British Remains, 8vo, 1777. The author of "Britannia after the Romans," never could have read this, although he refers to it, and he is much mistaken, p. 21, in asserting that Sigebert of Gemblou, who died in 1112, was acquainted with Geoffrey's History, and thus confounding Sigebert with his interpolator. For Sigebert's genuine text see the edition of Miræus, 4to, Antv. 1608.

† Ellis says, that according to the chronicles of Brittany, Anna was married to Budic, king of Armorica, and her sister united to Loth. Metr. Rom. i. 59, ed. 1811. In the English metrical Arthour and Merlin Gawayne's mother is named Belisent, p. 97, 4to, 1838, and in Malory's Morte d' Arthur, she is called Margause, i. 4. 4to, 1817.

‡ This passage is singularly misunderstood by Fordun, lib. 3, c. 25.

§ Wace, Lajamon, and Robert of Brunne add, that the cause of his being selected was that from his education at Rome he understood both the Latin and the British tongues.

mainly to the victory. He fights with the emperor single-handed, but they are separated by the surrounding combatants, and in the melée the latter is slain. After this succeeds the history of Mordred's treason, the return of Arthur, and the destruction of his Round Table.

The translators and imitators of Geoffrey have altered and amplified the above outline, but the general features remain the same. Wace has mistaken one passage in Geoffrey, and says that Gawayne arrived from Rome to assist Arthur in his expedition to Norway* ; and this interpretation is followed by Lazamon and Robert of Brunne. The passage in the latter is hitherto inedited, and may therefore be quoted here.

Loth sone, Syr Wawan,

Throughout the Brut, Gawayne is uniformly eulogised in similar terms, and placed first on the list of the Round Table,—a superiority indeed which in that work there were no Lancelots or Tristans to dispute. His adventures are, however, confined to the circle already described, and contain so small a share of the marvellous, that they might easily have been accepted as grave matter of history.

It is to the authors, therefore, of the prose legends of the Round Table we must look for the invention or preservation of those numerous romantic narratives which record the exploits of Gawayne and his fellows on a more ample canvass, and clothe them with a character purely imaginative.

In the earliest of these, the Roman du Saint Graal, sometimes called the Roman de Joseph d' Arimathie, the knights of the Round Table are not commemorated, since it relates more particularly to the history of the Holy Vessel, and to the fabulous descendants of Joseph, in whose hands the miraculous relique remained, until its arrival in Britain.

The second on the list is Merlin, which perhaps is the most curious of the series, and best intitled to be considered a compilation founded on Armorican or Welsh traditions. In this we recognise the Gawayne of Geoffrey, but with such additions to his history, and such a marvellous character given to his exploits, as to render him the chief personage in the romance. The writer exhausts all his powers of language in praise of the valor, courtesy, and knightly bearing of the prince of Orkney:—" Car le compte dit, que ce fut le plus saige chevalier en toutes choses qui fust au siecle, et le mieulx aprins, et le plus courtois, et le moins mesdisant d' aultruy." At the period of his birth Merlin pronounces his eulogium to Arthur, as destined to be one of the best and most loyal knights in the world. At an early age he comes with his three brothers to assist the British monarch in his war against the Saxons, who were then ravaging the kingdom, and after a series of sanguinary battles succeeds in expelling them. On account of his prowess he is made a knight of the Round Table, and appointed by Arthur constable of his household, and the next of rank to himself. After this he is employed in an expedition against king Claudas of Gaul and his Roman allies, whom he defeats with immense slaughter. At a later period of the history he is employed against the Roman emperor, and the narrative here is nearly similar to that of Geoffrey. In one MS. I have consulted, it is stated that Gawayne slew the emperor with his own hand †, and it is singular, that Peter de Langtoft should preserve this tradition, as expressed by his translator, Robert of Brunne,

I kan not say who did him falle,
Bot Syr Wawayn said thei alle.—f. 80^b †.

The most surprising adventure of our hero in this romance is related at the close, in which he goes in search of his friend Merlin to the forest of Broceliande, which is cited at length by Southey, in his Notes to the Preface of Morte d' Arthur, p. xlvi. It is in this work we also find the first mention of the supernatural strength of Gawayne, which augmented and diminished at different hours of the day. In the English metrical translation it is thus described :

For of his strengthe the maner
Sundel ye may lern and here.
Bituen auen-song and night
He no hadde bot o mannes might,

* MS. Add. 10, 292, f. 151^b. The printed edd. for connestablie read moictie.

† Ibid. f. 209. The printed ed. vol. ii. f. 154, follows the account of Geoffrey, but in a previous passage, vol. ii. f. 24, names the emperor Julius Cæsar, and says he was slain by Gawayne. This, however, is not in the MS., and seems to be an interpolation.

‡ See the original French text, MS. Cott. Jul. D. V. f. 39.

And that strengthe him last

 And fram arnemorowe to the midday
 He had strengthe of knightes tuay ;
 Fram midday fort after-none
 He nadde strengthe bot of one ;

 So to knightes he was strong*.

In the Lancelot du Lac, the next of the series, we are introduced to another race of heroes and a different set of adventures, connected only with the Merlin by the history of the war undertaken against King Claudas, and an incidental notice of the Saxons, as enemies of Arthur. Of course Lancelot is here the principal personage, and his intrigue with Queen Guenever the main-spring of the story, yet we find Sir Gawayne only inferior to Lancelot himself, and on some occasions the writer seems to have balanced between the two.⁷ Throughout the greater part of the romance they are represented as being the most intimate friends, and it is only after the blind fury of Lancelot has sacrificed three of Gawayne's brothers, that the latter entertains sentiments of hostility against their destroyer. He vows vengeance, and the result is the war undertaken by Arthur against the

* Romance of Arthour and Merlin, 4to, 1838, p. 178, printed for the Maitland Club. I am sorry to perceive the text of this edition abound with so many errors. It is in general closely translated from the French romance, and concludes imperfectly at fol. cc. of vol. i. of the edition of 1498. In the original the above passage appears thus, "Quant il se levoit au matin, il avoit la force al millor chevalier del monde ; et quant vint à eure de prime, si li doubloit, et à eure de tierce ausi ; et quant ce vint à eure de midi, si revenoit à sa première force, ou il avoit esté au matin ; et quant vint à eure de nonne, et à toutes les eures de la nuit, estoit il toudis en sa première force." MS. Add. 10,292, f. 113^b. Compare this passage in the printed edition, vol. i. f. cxiv. and corresponding passages in the Roman de Lancelot, vol. i. f. xciii^b, vol. ii. f. lxi., vol. iii. f. clxxxvii., ed. 1513., (where there is a fable introduced to account for the miraculous gift) ; Roman de Perceval, ff. liii^b, lx^b, ed. 1530 ; Malory's Morte d'Arthur, vol. i. p. 114, and the English metrical version, MS. Harl., 2252, f. 120^b.

knight of the *Joyeuse Garde, which ends in the discomfiture of Gawayne, and ultimately in his death. - The quest of the Saint Graal by Arthur's knights forms a novel incident in the narrative, and connects the story with Robert du Borron's first work. Among those whose exploits are recorded in this quest, Sir Gawayne's name is one of the most prominent, and although, like Lancelot, he is not destined to achieve the adventure, yet he succeeds in reaching the magic castle of the guardian of the Holy Vessel, and witnesses the marvels which ensue on his resting upon the lit aventureux†. His deeds of valor against King Gallehault's forces and elsewhere are so extraordinary, that Arthur orders them first to be recorded by his four veracious chroniclers, among whom Arroddian of Cologne is mentioned‡. The estimation also in which he was held at the court is shewn by his being elected unanimously king in the place of Arthur, on the disappearance and supposed death of that monarch. Of the episodes relating to him, those of his adventure with his amie, the daughter of the king of North Wales, and the history of his captivity in the prison of the giant Karados, are perhaps the most interesting. In the former we are told that the lady's chamber was guarded by twenty armed knights. These however at night fall asleep very opportunely, and Gawayne is enabled without resistance to reach his mistress's apartment. He takes

* On the subject of this castle (placed by English poetical antiquaries at Berwick) see a curious paper in the Mémoires de la Société des Antiquaires de France, vol. x. p. 237, 8vo, 1834, intitled, "Mémoire sur le Chateau de la Joyeuse Garde, sur la rivière d'Elorn, près Landerneau, Département du Finistère. Par le Chevalier de Freminville."

† In the Roman de Perceval, f. xxxix^b, the incident of the enchanted bed is repeated, but under different circumstances. It forms the subject of an ivory carving engraved in the Mém. de l'Acad. des Inscriptions, vol. xviii. p. 322, 4to, 1753, and in Ferrario, Analisi degli Romanzi di Cavalleria, vol. ii. p. 101, which is unintelligible to the writers.

‡ Vol. i. f. cxliii^b. One might forgive the writer in the Bibliothèque des Romans for believing in the historical reality of these personages (See Dunlop's Hist. of Fiction, i. 295); but it is matter of sincere regret to find so gross a blunder sanctioned by the name of Daunou, in the Hist. Litt. de la France, tome xvi. p. 177.

off his helmet and ventaille, and approaching the bed where the beauty lay asleep, begins to kiss her. She awakes, and exclaims, "Sainte Marie! qui est ce?" He replies, "Taisez vous, belle douce amye, c'est la chose au monde que vous aimez mieulx." The lovers speedily contrive to make themselves happy, but the old king and queen are on the watch, and by means of a window that faces the chamber, perceive Gawayne lying in their daughter's arms. They determine to kill him, and call two chamberlains, who arm themselves with a sword and mace, and come to the bed. The first makes a stab at the knight under the counterpane, but the cold steel only grazing his arm, he is aroused to a sense of his danger. The other intending to demolish him at once, strikes a blow with the mace so violently, that although it misses its object, it penetrates half a foot into the wall, and shivers in pieces! Gawayne now loses no time, but jumping out of bed, rewards the two assailants by knocking out their brains, and then throwing their bodies out of the room, quietly locks the door, which he seems to have before forgotten to do. He then puts on his armour, and, encouraged by his mie, awaits the attack of the twenty guards, who come to the door and kick at it, whilst the old queen stands aloof, and cries out to them, "Assaillez, filz de putains, que faites vous, que ne occiez le traystre qui leans est!" Gawayne, however, escapes, leaving behind him many dead bodies as testimonies of his prowess! In the course of this romance the author presents us with a portrait of Gawayne, which I quote from an early MS. in the Royal Library, 19 B. VII. f. 246, as being fuller than the edition. "Messire G. avoit la chere simple & debonaire, et la regardure pitouse. E il fust voirs, que messire G. estoit li plus beus de tous ses freres en graundure de cors.—Il est voirs, que mesire G. fuist li emplus de tous ses freres, & fuist beu chevalier de son grant, & bien taillés de totes* membres ; ne se fu trop grant ne trop petis, mes de bele stature ; si fu li plus chevaleros de son age que nus de se[s] freres ; & nepurquant li estoire dit, que Gaheries se[s] frere souffrit bien pres ausi grant fes des armes come il fist, mes il ne s'en mist oncques si grant cure com messire G. fist tous jours, & purce ne fuist pas si renomez. Et noepurquant la chose qu'il plus mist monseignor G. en remembraunce, si fu qu'il ama povre gent, & lor fu dolz & pitous."*

We next come to the Quête du Saint Graal, often confounded with the History of the Graal. It is intended as a continuation of the Lancelot, and was certainly composed subsequently to that romance, as the internal evidence demonstrates. The persons here celebrated are Perceval, Gawayne, Lancelot, and his son Galaad, by the last of whom the adventure is finally brought to an end. † The exploits of Gawayne in pursuing the grand object of their search are marked, as in the two preceding romances, by a singular love of peril, determined valor, generosity, and courtesy. He is on all occasions the most amiable personage of the Round Table. His adherence to the laws of knighthood is tried severely more than once, and particularly at a tournament against Nabigan de la Roche, where in consequence of a vow taken to grant the first request made of him, he is enjoined to act the part of a coward, and sustains unmoved the jeers of the assembly. The following day, however, makes amends for this act of self-abasement, for he then nobly sustains his own character, and carries off the prize of the golden circlet‡. † The most chi-valorous of his undertakings is the acquisition of the famous sword with which St. John was beheaded, in the course of which he slays a monstrous giant on the top of a hill; much after the fashion in which Arthur killed the giant Dinabuc on the Mont St. Michel. We have also a narrative, as in the Lancelot, but differing much in the circumstances, of Gawayne's arrival in the palace of King Pescheur, and the marvels of the Graal.

* In a MS. compilation of the 15th century, I have read a similar description, with the addition : " Il n'eust les chevaulx blancs ne rous, mais entredeux ; le visaige eust aucques brun ; les yeux eust vers et moult atrayens ; barbe eust à planté ; les espaules belles et larges, et les bras et les poings gros et carrez, et fors à desmesure. Courtois et gracieux estoit plus que chevalier du monde." I have mislaid the reference, but believe it to have been a MS. in Broadley's sale, 1832, intitled, "Les noms, armes et blasons des Chevaliers de la Table Ronde, ou sont escripz les granz faiz de tous les Chevaliers."

Map's series of romances is closed by the Mort Artus, which is generally confounded with the Lancelot. The queen's amour with the latter here leads to the disunion and destruction of the Round Table. The war undertaken by Arthur against the violator of his honor, proves his ruin. A furious battle takes place, in which Gawayne singly kills thirty knights, but his valor avails not, for in a second encounter Arthur's forces are worsted. The Pope interferes, and Lancelot gives up the queen, and retires to his paternal dominions. Arthur follows him, at the instigation of Gawayne, and a combat takes place between Gawayne and Lancelot. The victory is long doubtful, but at length is given to the more youthful opponent, and Gawayne is left on the field, severely wounded in the head. After this follows the conflict between the forces of Arthur and the Roman emperor, and the return of Arthur to Britain on account of Mordred's treason, all of which is founded on the narrative of Geoffrey, but told with the usual license of the romance-writers. The part which relates to Gawayne's death has some pathos and interest, and will bear an abridgment.

Arthur and his fleet arrive at Dover, where he is joyfully received at the castle. At vesper-time he is sent for by his nephew, and on coming to him, finds Gawayne so weak, as scarcely to be able to speak. On hearing the king's sorrow he opened his eyes, and said, "Sire, I am dying, and I pray you in God's name to refrain from a battle with Mordred, for I tell you truly he is the man who will cause your death." He then desires to be remembered to Lancelot, whose pardon he asks, and requests him to visit his tomb.—“And I pray you, Sire, that you cause me to be interred at Kamalot, with my brothers ; and I wish to be laid in the tomb wherein my brother Gaheriet lies, for him I loved most, and this inscription to be placed above, CY GISENT LES DEUX FRERES GAHERIET ET GAUVAIN, QUE LANCELOT OCCIST PAR L'OUTRAIGE DE GAUVAIN.” Arthur asks if he believes Lancelot to have been the cause of his death, which he answers in the affirmative, on account of the wound he had received in his head, which was renewed in the battle with the Romans. “Et a tant se teust messire G. que plus ne parla, fors au derrenier qu'il dist, Jesu Crist, pere debonnaire, ne me juge pas selon mes mes-faitz!” Arthur swoons several times with grief, and exclaims, “Ha! Ha! mort villaine, comment as tu esté si hardye d'assaillir ung tel homme comme estoit mon nepveu, qui de bonté passoit tout le monde!” On the mournful news arriving at the castle, the lamentation is so excessive, that *you could not have heard God thunder. They enveloped the corpse in silk, and surrounded it with so many lighted tapers, that the castle seemed on fire. In the morning Arthur caused a bierre chevaleresse to be brought, and Gawayne's body placed therein, which he gave in charge to one hundred men to convey to Kamalot. Every eye is moistened, and the people cry out, “O preudhomme courtois, et bon chevalier sur tous aultres, mauldicte soit la morte qui de toy nous a osté la compaignie!” The corpse is carried to the castle of Belloc, the lady of which, on hearing whose it is, loudly deplores his fate, and avows she had never loved any one but Gawayne. Her husband requites this declaration with a stroke of his sword, which cuts off her shoulder, and penetrates deeply into the dead body of the knight. The lady expires, and requests to be buried by his side. Her death is revenged by the attendants, who then proceed with the body to Kamalot, and bury it in the tomb of Gaheriet, in the middle of the monastery. The remains of the lady of Belloc are also interred close by, with an inscription stating that she had been killed for her love of Gawayne*.

The substance of this romance, but much abridged, is to be found in Malory's Morte d'Arthur, books 18, 20, and 21, and the latter text was versified in the reign of Henry the Seventh by an anonymous English author, who follows it in some instances verbally †.

The account of Gawayne's death differs considerably in the various versions of the story, nor is the place of his sepulture less a subject of disagreement. In Geoffrey, Arthur lands at the Portus Rutupi, rendered Richborough by Thompson, and Sandwich by Ellis ‡ and others, where a battle takes place, in which Gawayne and his companions are slain. Wace, Lazamon §, and Robert of Brunne copy this narrative, but fix the spot at Romney. The Cotton MS. of Wace, Vitell. A. x., reads Toteneis (Totnes), while the Welsh (Tysilio) translation of Geoffrey and the alliterative poem in the Lincoln MS. place the locality at Southampton. Malory and

* Vol. iii. ff. 191^b, 192^b, ed. 1513.

† This metrical version is preserved in MS. Harl. 2252, and was printed in 1819 for the Roxburghe Club. Ellis is in error in stating that it was translated immediately from the French text, Metr. Rom. i. 324, (copied by Dunlop, Hist. of Fiction, i. 244.) Had he taken the trouble of comparing them together, he would not have hazarded such an assertion.

‡ Ellis probably followed the general stream of the chroniclers who borrow from the English prose Brut, subsequently known under the title of Caxton's Chronicle and Fructus Temporum. In this and in its French prose MS. original, the place of landing is called Sandwich. See also a ballad printed in Percy, vol. iii. p. 40, ed. 1794.

§ But in another passage Lazamon writes, that Gawayne was killed "suth in Cornwale." vol. ii. p. 546.

his metrical translator follow the romance of Lancelot, in assigning the locality to *Dover, but they vary in the detail. The latter says of our hero :

Syr Gawayne armyd hyme in that stounde,
 Allas ! to longe hys hede was bare,
 He was seke, and sore vnsond,
 Hys woundis greuyd hym fulle sare.
One hytte hym vpon the olde wounde,
W^t a tronchon of an ore ;
 There is good Gawayne gone to grounde,
 That speche spake he neuyr more.

MS. Harl. 2252, fol. 123^b.

Malory follows the French text more closely, but inserts a letter, supposed to be written by the dying knight to Sir Lancelot, and concludes,—“ And so at the houre of none Syr Gawayn yelded up the spyryte ; and thenne the kyng lete entiere hym in a chappel within Douer Castel ; and there yet alle men maye see the sculle of hym, and the same wound is sene that Syr Launcelot gaf hym in bataill.” vol. ii. p. 435. Caxton, in his Preface, alleges the last mentioned circumstance as a proof of the reality of the fact ; and Leland quotes the authority of the Chronicon Dovarensis monasterii for the existence of Gawayne’s bones in the same place, which were shewn to himself on his visit there†. Leland therefore rejects the statement of William of Malmesbury, who says, that in the reign of William the Conqueror, the sepulchre of Gawayne was discovered on the sea-shore of a province of Wales, named Ross, [in Pembrokeshire,] fourteen feet in length, “ ubi, à quibusdam ut asseritur, ab hostibus vulneratus, et naufragio

* Ellis must have read the passage carelessly, or he would not have transferred the place of sepulture to the Cathedral of Canterbury. See Metr. Rom. i. 392.

ejectus, à quibusdam dicitur à civibus in publico epulo interfectus.*" Leland acknowledges, however, that the remains of a castle called by Gawayne's name were still extant in his time near the shore, and at the present day, on the southernmost point of Pembrokeshire, called St. Gowen's head, stands a small chapel formed out of the rock, named after the same personage, which the traditional voice of the neighbourhood assigns as the burial place of Arthur's nephew †. Wace was ignorant of these statements, for he expressly writes,

Grans fu li dols de son neveu,
Le cors fist metre ne sai u,
 Ainc hom ne sot u il fu mis,
 Ne qui l'ocist, ce m'est avis.

Vol. ii. p. 225, ed. 1839 †.

Lazamon says nothing of the sepulture, but tells us that Gawayne previous to his death made great slaughter, and killed the son of Childric with his own hand, but at length was slain "thurh an eorle Sexisce,—særi iwurthe his saule!" Peter Langtoft and his translator add to the confusion, by stating that the body of Gawayne was interred at Wybre or Wibire, "en la Walescherye,"—"that is, in Wales §,"—by which I presume is intended Webbery,

* Scriptores post Bedam, lib. ii. p. 64, edit. 1596. Malmesbury adds, that Gawayne reigned in that part of Britain called Waluuithia (Galloway), but was expelled from his kingdom by the brother and nephew of Hengist. We here may, perhaps, trace the historical incident which gave rise to the account in the romance of Merlin and elsewhere of Gawayne's battles with the Saxons. The above passage in Malmesbury is copied by many succeeding chroniclers, down to the time of Stowe and Baker.

† See a description in Fenton's Pembrokeshire, p. 414, 4to, 1811: but he knows nothing of the legend, and talks of some Irish hermit being buried there.

not far from Bideford, in Devonshire. Lastly, in the prose French and English Brut, whether manuscript or printed, and in the romance of Arthur in the Red Book of Bath, Arthur is said to cause the bodies of Gawayne and Augusel to be taken to Scotland, their native country.

∟ The alliterative Scottish romance of Morte Arthure, in the library of Lincoln Cathedral, marked A. 1. 17, is very much amplified in its account of the destruction of the Round Table, and does not agree with any other authority I have consulted*. The British forces enter the harbour of Southampton, and Gawayne jumps into the water, "in alle his gylte wedys," attacks the Danish auxiliaries, and kills their leader, the king of Gothland. He then with a small band of followers advances against Mordred, and fights with his usual impetuosity.

In to þe hale bataile hedlynges he rynnys,
 And hurtes of þe hardieste pat one the erthe lenges,
 Letande alles a lyone, he lawneches theme thorowe,
 Lordes and ledars that one the launde houes.—
 And for wonsome and wille alle his wit failede,
 That wode alles a wyldre beste he wente at þe gayneste,

At length he encounters the traitor chief, and wounds him severely, but in the act of finishing the contest with a "shorte knyfe," the weapon slips on the mail, and his adversary instantly takes advantage of the accident, and strikes him through the helm to the brain.

And thus Syr Gawayne es gone, the gude man of armes,

 Thus Syr Gawayne es gone, that gyede many othire;

King “Froderike of Fres” comes up, and inquires of Mordred who the knight was that had felled so many of his men, and now lay deprived of life? The reply is worthy of transcription, as a summary of the knightly qualities for which our Hero was distinguished. X

Than Syr Modrede w^t mouthe melis fulle faire :—
“ He was makles one molde, mane, be my trowhe !

Mordred having thus borne testimony to the worth of his fallen foe and brother, sheds tears, and moves away, cursing the time his fate was shaped to work such unhappiness. Arthur afterwards causes the body of Gawayne to be honorably conveyed to Winchester, where it is received by a procession of the prior and monks, and they are charged by the king to observe every funereal solemnity,—

Lokis it be clanly kepyd, he said, and in the kirke holdene,

Menskede w^t messes, for mede of the saule.
Loke it wante no waxe, ne no wirchipe elles,
And at the body be baarmede, and one erthe holdene.—fol. 95.

I have now traced the history of Sir Gawayne from his birth to his burial-place, and might gladly have wished to let him rest in peace, but this is forbidden. Subsequently to the completion of the romances by Robert de Borron and Map appeared a new work, the object of which was to introduce a knight of the Round Table, unknown and unnoticed by the preceding writers on the subject*. This was the famous Tristan, whose amour with the fair Iseult and feats of arms, told as they were in the inimitable style of the bon vieux François, found subsequently such favor with the world, as completely to eclipse the earlier romance compositions. The first portion of this work was written by Luces de Gast†, in the time of Henry the Second, and the concluding part by Helie de Borron, in the reign of Henry the Third. Both are animated by the same spirit,—that of vilifying the lineage of king Loth, and more particularly the fame and deeds of Gawayne. Among other fictions unknown to previous writers, they feign a hostility between the sons of king Pellinor and the children of Loth, and take every opportunity of praising the latter at the expense of the former‡. Pellinor is said to have put king Loth to death, and is killed in return by Gawayne. Lamorat de Galles, the eldest son of Pellinor, and brother of

* The fact of the more recent composition of the Tristan is, I think, indisputable. It is perfectly incredible, had he been previously celebrated, that no mention should be made of him by Robert de Borron and Map. These were also the sentiments of my learned friend M. Paulin Paris, in the first volume of his interesting work, Les Manuscrits François de la Bibliothèque du Roi, pp. 194-198, but in his second volume, p. 352, he retracts this opinion, and says he founded his arguments on the second portion of Tristan, composed at a later epoch. But the same conclusions may equally be drawn from the first part, in which the direct allusions to the Roman de Lancelot are frequent. To give a single instance. In the Lancelot, vol. i. f. clxxvi., is an account of Gawayne being carried off by a giant named Karados; and in the Tristan the same event is noticed as having previously occurred, vol. i. f. xlvi. (MS. Harl. 49, fol. 105^b.)

† The Abbé de la Rue conjectures that he possessed the seignory of the territory of Gast, in the canton of St. Severe, department of Calvados. Essais sur les Bardes, ii. 231. This requires confirmation, but merits inquiry.

‡ See the indignant remarks of Southey on the Tristan, in his Preface to Morte d'Arthur, p. xvi.

Perceval, intrigues with the Lady of Orkney, the mother of our hero, and is slain by her sons, for which act of retributive justice Gawayne is severely censured. Indeed whenever Gawayne is mentioned, it is only to represent him under circumstances of defeat and disgrace, or to calumniate him. The manuscripts of this work are fuller, by one half, than the printed editions, and contain an additional quantity of misrepresentation*. To the same author who completed the Tristan we are indebted for a huge compilation intitled Gyron le Courtois, in which the exploits of Gyron, Meliadus, Branor le Brun, the Chevalier sans Peur, and a fresh race of worthies are commemorated, to whom even the Lancelots and Tristans are represented as inferior. Of course Sir Gawayne occupies here a very inferior grade, and is so changed from the all-conquering hero of the Merlin, as scarcely to be recognised. From this compilation, as well as from the prior works of Robert de Borron and Map, was formed the abridgment made by Rusticien de Pise in the reign of Edward the First; and in the course of the succeeding two centuries other compilers arose, who selected what portions they pleased, and formed them into distinct bodies of romance. These more recent compilations must be regarded as the immediate originals of the romances printed under the titles of Gyron le Courtois and Meliadus de Léonnois. The former of these first issued from the press of Verard, and represents with tolerable accuracy a portion of Rusticien's work. In this Sir Gawayne is only mentioned on two occasions, and in both passages as a vanquished knight. In the Meliadus† he is oftener introduced, but without a much greater

* MSS. of the prose Tristan are rare in the libraries of Great Britain. In the British Museum are only three copies of portions of the first part, and two copies of the second part. The complete text, I believe, is in the collection of Sir Thomas Phillipps, Bart.

† The author of this romance frequently refers to the Tristan, the Lancelot, the Perceval, and the Gyron. M. Paris is inclined to refer its compilation to the commencement of the degree of praise. His character for courtesy is indeed acknowledged, and an awkward fiction is alleged to account for his inferior powers, by stating that in the tournament of Galles, maintained between Arthur and the Seigneur des Loingtains Isles, (Galléhault,) he received such hurts as to deprive him of his previous force, so that afterwards he never recovered it.—“Et du grant dueil qu'il en eut, il fist depuis moult de felonies, que la Table Ronde achepta moult durement.” From the work of Rusticien de Pise it is probable that Sir Thomas Malory compiled the English prose Morte d'Arthur in the year 1469, in which, as Scott and Southey have remarked, the character of Gawayne is traduced, and his history misrepresented. There are a few adventures of Gawayne in this work which I have not found elsewhere, but they were doubtless furnished by the French manuscript originals, which I have had no opportunity of consulting*.

The metrical romances composed by Chrestien de Troyes require next to be noticed. They all appear to have been borrowed from the prose romances, but contain also incidents derived from other sources. The longest and best known of these is the Perceval le Gallois, so large a portion of which relates to the exploits of sir Gawayne, that, as a French writer has already observed, it sixteenth century, shortly before it was printed, but in Sir Thomas Phillipps's possession is a MS. of the fourteenth century, agreeing generally with the printed text, and containing the preface of Helie de Borron to his Gyron le Courtois, which in the printed edition of Meliadus is erroneously attributed to Rusticien. From this cause have sprung innumerable misstatements on the subject of these works, and the age of the composers.

* There are no copies in the British Museum or Bodleian Library of the compilations of Helie de Borron and Rusticien. In Sir Thomas Phillipps's Library is a recension of Helie's work by Jehan le Vaillant, made in the year 1391, which was formerly in the La Vallière collection. I find also that a prose work intitled Roman du Roi Artus was printed at Paris in 1488, but is so scarce, that I do not know if a copy is to be found in England. It is evidently a late compilation, chiefly taken from the Merlin, but with variations. It is here stated, that at Loth's death Mordred disputes the right of Gawayne to his father's throne, and on Arthur taking the part of the latter, the catastrophe is brought on which ends in the monarch's destruction. This is quite a new version of the story.

might with equal propriety have been named after both these heroes. I have already spoken of this romance in my Notes, (p. 305,) and its popularity in Scotland and England must have been great, since no less than three of the poems printed in the present volume are founded on episodes in it. Here, as in the second part of the Saint Graal, the adventures of Gawayne in search of the Mysterious Vessel and the palace of king Pescheur, occupy a prominent place. His character for valor and courtesy re-appears in its original lustre, and is praised with the same warmth as in the romance of Merlin.—“Sire,” says an esquire to Arthur, after relating the feats of Gawayne at the enchanted castle of queen Yguerne, “en ma puissance Gauvain assez suffisamment louer n'est pas possible ; le propoz assez aorné ne la langue diserte ne ay-je elegante ne propice à ce faire, pource que, comme je croy, de toute chevallerie est la perle ; c'est celluy qui de tout vice est nect, innocent, et immaculle ; c'est celluy qui ne pourroit endurer felonnie ne mechanceté ; c'est le consolateur des desollez, le père des orphelins, l'abresse et la reconfort des femmes vefues.” fol. xlviij. We are also in this romance introduced to Giglan, the son of Gawayne by the sister of Brandelis, of whom mention only previously occurs in the first part of the prose Tristan.

The remaining romances by Chrestien, are the Tristan, apparently now lost ; the Chevalier au Lion, which is known as the original of the English Ywaine and Gawin ; the Roman d' Erec et Enide, in which Gawayne is assigned the first station among the knights of the Round Table* ; the Roman de Fregus, a narrative in many respects resembling that of Perceval, and the hero of which is a native of Scotland; the Roman de la Charrette, which is an episode taken from Lancelot; and the Roman de Cliges. The last four still remain in manuscript, in the Bibliothèque du Roi at Paris, but analyses of them are given in the Bibliothèque des Romans and the Histoire Litteraire de la France. In all of them we find Gawayne very honorably noticed.

Besides the longer romances several shorter poems of the same chivalrous character exist, in which Syr Gawayne's adventures are commemorated. One of these is the *Chevalier à l'Epée, the author of which blames Chrestien de Troyes for omitting to celebrate Gawayne in a distinct poem, and says he will narrate one out of his numerous exploits. The subject connects it with the English tale of Syr Gawene and the Carle of Carlyle, as I have pointed out in the Notes, (p. 345.) Here too we meet with the amusing incident of the greyhounds†, which seems to have been borrowed from the metrical Perceval. Another is the fabliau of La Mule sans Frein‡; in which Gawayne undertakes for a lady the adventure of the bridle, and after many hazardous conflicts, succeeds in gaining it. A prosaic episode also is preserved, intitled the Conte de l'Atre Périlleux, containing an interesting account of Gawayne's encounter with a formidable magician or semi-dæmon, whom he destroys amidst flashes of lightning, and afterwards rescues a damsel from the power of a redoubtable knight named Ersanors de la Montagne§.

In all probability other narratives remain in manuscript relating to the same personage, and some may have been lost. In the Reductorium Morale of Pierre Bercheur, Prior of St. Eloi, at Paris, better known by his Latin name of Berchorius, who is supposed by Warton to have been the author of the *Gesta Romanorum, at the end of his Prologue to book 14, De Naturæ Mirabilibus, speaking of the wonderful relations extant of Britain, he writes, "What shall I say of the marvels which occur in the histories of Gawayne (Galvaini), and Arthur? Of which I will mention only one, namely, of the palace under the water, which Gawayne accidentally discovered, where he found a table spread with eatables, and a chair placed ready for him, but was not able to find the door by which he might go out; but being hungry, and about to eat, suddenly the head of a dead man appeared in the dish, and a giant, who lay on a bier near the fire, rising up, and striking the roof with his head, and the head calling out and forbidding the repast, he never dared touch the viands, and after witnessing many wonders, got away he knew not how †!" Berchorius here evidently refers to the prodigies seen by Gawayne at the palace of the Graal, but the manuscripts used by him must have differed greatly from those now extant, or he must have quoted from memory, and much misrepresented the story ‡. The former conjecture seems the most probable. So also in a copy of the Merlin, No. 6958 of the Bibliothèque du Roi, we meet with an episode not in the usual text of this romance. Gawayne rescues a lady by force of arms from Oriol, King of the Saxons, and to his great

He adds, "Melius ergo arbitror de istis tacere, quàm de ipsis aliqua narrativè asserere, ne forte videar fabulas hominum vel etiam opera dæmonum pro naturali veritate narrare. Ista ergo ad præsens omittam, nisi forte quando de fabulis poetarum tractabo, inseram aliquid de præmissis." delight recognises her as his mie, the Countess of Limos.—“ Si saut jus du cheval, et l’embrace, et baise en la face, et ele lui, que onques dangier nul ne l’en fait ; et li dist, ‘ Certes, sire, bien me devez baisier et accoler, que onques mais baisier n’eustes, au mien escient, que vous autretant chierement eussiez acheté.’ ‘ Dame,’ fait il, ‘ de tant suis-je plus liez.’* ”

Our hero seems to have been famed more for his various intrigues than his constancy. At the trial of the ivory horn sent by Morgain to Arthur’s court, he is the first to raise it to his lips, but no sooner does he touch the wine than it runs over the enchanted rim, for “ Ja nul chevalier n’y bevra qui aura triché son amy, ou que sa mie l’ait triché, que le vin sur lui ne respande†. ” In the Jeaste of Gawayne we have one of his affairs of gallantry narrated, copied from the Perceval, and in the same romance we have a similar account of his amour with the daughter of the king of Escallon, with whom being surprised, he defends himself with a chess-board. A third affair of the same kind takes place with Taurée, sister of the Little Knight of the Great Forest, and in the Lancelot and Malory’s Morted’Arthur we have additional narratives of his influence with the fair sex ; so that we can readily understand why he is addressed by the lady in the Scottish romance of the Grene Knyzt as a master and pattern not only of courtesy but of the art of love.

One more romantic composition relative to Gawayne remains to be noticed, which is the more remarkable from its being quite distinct from the established fictions of the Round Table. This composition may be assigned to the early part of the fourteenth century, and is written in Latin ; but whether derived from “ floating Celtic traditions,” or from an Anglo-Norman original, must be left to conjecture. It is intitled De Ortu Waluuanii, nepotis Arturi, and is a strange tissue of romantic fiction, embellished with many rhetorical flourishes. In it Gawayne is represented as the result of a secret intrigue between king Loth and Anna, the daughter of Uter Pendragon, and to conceal his birth his mother delivers him to some foreign merchants, who carry him to the coast of France, not far from Narbonne. They leave the ship and the infant in the care of a boy, who falls asleep; and in their absence a fisherman carries the child off, together with a casket, containing testimonials of his birth, and a vast quantity of treasure. He afterwards proceeds to Rome, where giving himself out to be a descendant of a noble Roman family, he is received most honorably by the emperor, and assigned as a residence the marble palace of Scipio Africanus. The boy grows up, and is beloved by all for his courteous demeanour and surprising boldness. At the age of twelve years his reputed father dies, but on his death-bed reveals the secret of Gawayne's birth to the emperor and the pope Sulpicius, but charges them not to reveal it until he should be restored to his parents. The youth is brought up under the emperor's protection, receives knighthood from his hands, and distinguishes himself by his prowess so greatly, that he is sent for by the christians living at Jerusalem to fight in single combat, as a champion in their behalf, against the champion of the king of Persia, who had made war on them. In his way to the east he lands on an island ruled by king Milocrates, an enemy of the Romans, whom he kills, and afterwards encounters the hostile fleet of the king's brother, whose ships are sunk or captured. He at length reaches Jerusalem, and fights on foot with the pagan giant Gormundus, the Persian champion, for the space of three days, but at last cleaves him asunder with his sword from the head downwards, — "non optabile stomacho antidotum," — as the writer oddly remarks. He afterwards returns triumphantly to Rome, and thence, hearing of the fame of Arthur, to Britain, where he establishes his claim as nephew of the British monarch. Such is the brief outline of this singular story, in which we can clearly trace some few particulars referable to Geoffrey of Monmouth, but worked up in a manner that would bear comparison with the extravagant fictions of a much later era.

The popularity of Gawayne, in spite of the calumny contained in the Tristan and Gyron, must have been great, but was necessarily joined with that of other heroes of the Round Table. His adventures are referred to by several Provençal poets previous to the close of the twelfth century, and often subsequently*. In the poems of the Anglo-Norman trouveurs his name very frequently occurs, and always in terms of respect. It would occupy too much space to specify the passages, but I have indicated the principal in a note below†. The author of a manuscript Latin trans-

* See the Journal des Savans, p. 521, Sept., 1833; and Raynouard's Choix des Poesies des Troubadours, vol. ii. pp. 288, 295, 296, 298. By the author of the romance of Jaufré and Elias Cairel, his feats of arms are placed on the same scale with the wisdom of Merlin or the love-passion of Tristan.

† A poem is quoted by the Abbé de la Rue, and assigned to king Henry the First, intitled Le dictie d'Urbain, in which it is said,—

Plus estre corteis et sein
Que ne fut Sire Gauwein,

but I should doubt both the authorship and antiquity claimed for it. See Essais sur les Bardes, vol. ii. p. 38, 8vo, 1834. In the same volume, p. 63, the Abbé states that Turolde, the author of a romance on the battle of Roncevaux, places Gawayne among the paladins by the name of Gautier. This is a silly blunder, arising out of a passage in a more recent copy of the poem, analysed by M. Monin, in which the words li nies Artus do not refer to Gautiers, but to Malarsus, and the name of Artus itself is a mischievous variation from the original text, which reads Droun. Compare M. Michel's valuable edition of the Chanson de Rolland, 8vo, 1837, p. 79, and Monin's Dissertation, pp. 26, 32. Consult also the Lai de Lanval, by Marie de France, vol. i. p. 220, 8vo, 1820; Le Couronnement de Renart, vol. iv. pp. 3, 5, 8vo, 1826; Lai de l'Ombre, p. 43, of Lais Inédits, par Fr. Michel, 8vo, 1836; Lai de Melion, p. 57, 8vo, 1832; the metrical Livre de Oger de Dannemarche, MS. Reg. 15 E. vi. f. 81^b, col. 2; the Roman de la Rose, vol. iii. p. 211, 8vo, 1814; and the Roman du lation of the celebrated Calilah u Dimnah, made in the year 1313, complains in his preface of the avidity with which the romances of Gawayne and others were read*. But we are not hence to infer that there was originally any large distinct romance which passed by his name, but that allusion is made to one of those in which his exploits are prominently recorded. In this manner the romance of Gawayne might mean either the Merlin or the Perceval or the Lancelot, as in similar cases we read of the romances of Gallehault, Agravain, and La Charrette, all of which are only portions or branches of the Lancelot. Thus too in the Inventory of Guillaume d'Orange, quoted by M. Michel in the Glossary to the Chanson du Rolland, p. 209. In the last of these passages Gawayne is placed in fairy-land with many other heroes of the cycles of Arthur and Charlemagne. The British sovereign thus addresses Renouart,—

Je sui Artus, dont l'en a tant parlé,
Renouart, frère, ce sont la gent faé,
Qui sont du siècle venus et trespasé.
Vez-là Rollant, ce vermeill coulouré,
Et c'est Gauvain, à ce poile roé,
Et puis Yvain, un sien compaign privé;
Et cele bele au vis enluminé,
Icele est Morgue, ou tant a de biauté.

Hence may be explained the lines of Chaucer,—

That Syr Gawayne with his old curtesie,
Although he come agen out of Fairie,
He could him nought amendin in no worde.

Lydgate also, in his Fall of Princes, B. viii. ch. 25, speaks of Arthur's court in Fairie.

* "Vos igitur regalem curiam frequentes, qui tempus vestrum consumitis in narrationibus anbagicis,—verbi gracia, Lanceloti, Galvani, consimilibusque,—libros in quibus nulla consistit sciencia vel modica viget utilitas, crebrius intendent, abjecta vanitatis palea, librum istum regium virtutum perlegatis," etc. The writer was a physician, named Raymond de Biterris, and he translated the work from the Spanish at the request of Joan, queen of Navarre. It is altogether different from the version of John of Capua, printed under the title of the Directorium Humanae Vitae. A beautiful copy of the work is preserved in the Bibl. du Roi at Paris, No. 8504.

the Library in the Louvre, in 1373, we find notices of volumes described, as, “ No. 287. De Merlin, et des fais de Lancelot du Lac et de Gauvin, em prose,” and again, “ No. 302. Du Saint Graal, de Lancelot, de Gauvain, en grant volume plat, em prose.” In the same manner must the passage of Caxton be understood, where he speaks of “ the grete and many volumes of *Seint Graal, Ghalshot, and Launcelotte de Lake, Gawayne, Perceval, Lyonel, and Tristram,” which renders Southey’s conjecture as to their separate form of no force.

If we now turn to our English writers, we shall find the fame of Gawayne in full vigor from the thirteenth to the sixteenth century. The stream of romance which brought down the name of Arthur, invariably joined to it that of his courteous and valiant nephew; and his reputation in the popular estimation continued to retain its hold, in spite of the misrepresentations of the authors of the Tristan and the Gyron. John Hautville, author of the Archithrenius, written previous to the year 1207, places the following noble sentiments in our Hero’s mouth,—

Et Walganus ego, qui nil reminiscor avara
Illoculasse manu; non hæc mea fulgurat auro
Sed gladio dextra †————

In some prefatory lines to the collection of Metrical Legends of the Saints, written shortly before the year 1300 †, we read,—

† MS. Cott. Vesp. B. xxiii. f. 30, and MS. Harl. 4066, 2, f. 30. The knight previously says of himself,— ‡ Warton, in Hist. Engl. Poetr. says 1200, vol. i. pp. 14, 126, and is incautiously followed by Ritson, Metr. Rom. p. civ. I am surprised to find the same error repeated in Mr. Guest’s valuable work on English Rhythms, vol. ii. p. 220. The same writer persists, p.

Again, in the romance of Richard Cœur de Lion, composed probably within ten years of the same period,

In a curious poem in the Digby MS. No. 86, intituled “ Le Cuntent parentre le Mauvis et la Russinole, written in the reign of Edward the First, is the following stanza :

 Wolt thou me senden of this lond,
 For ich holde with the ryzte ;
 I take witnessse of Sire Wawain,
 That Ihesu Crist 3af inyzt and main,
 And strengthe for to fytte.—fol. 137 †.

412, in assigning the year 1278 to Robert of Gloucester's Chronicle, although in my Preface to Havelok I have pointed out a passage in it which proves it not to have been completed till after 1297.

* Weber's Metr. Rom. ii. 4; see also ii. 261. He is greatly mistaken in supposing the romance of Ywaine and Gawin to be here alluded to.

† A fragment of the same poem, written thirty years later, is preserved in the Auchinleck MS., and is thence quoted by Leyden, in Complaynte of Scotland, p. 159.

Chaucer's lines in reference to our hero are well known*, and so are the passages in the romance of Ywaine and Gawin†, composed nearly at the same period. In a legendary MS. work, intitled Cursor Mundi, of the same age, we read in the prologue,—

Man yhernes rimes for to here,
 And romans red on manere sere,—
 O kyng Arthour, that was so rike,
 Quam non in hys tim was like ;
 O ferlys that hys knythes fell,
 That aunter sere I here of tell ;
 As Wawan, Cai, and other stabell,
 For to were the Ronde Tabell.

MS. Cott. Vesp. A. III. fol. 1†.

In the fifteenth century there are numerous allusions to Sir Gawayne, and the vernacular translations of the Saint Graal and Merlin§, Mort Artus||, Perceval¶, *Launfal , the Squyr of Lowe Degre††, and other romances, united with the publication of Malory's diffuse work towards the close of this period, must have powerfully operated in diffusing a knowledge of his romantic career. In a metrical version of Guido de Colonna's War of Troy, which has erroneously been attributed to Lydgate, the writer thus enumerates the popular fictions of the day,—

In the reign of Henry the Eighth we learn from a curious passage in Skelton's Litle Boke of Phillip Sparow, what were the principal romance-stories then in vogue, and among them is "Gawen and Syr Guy," as well as Lancelot, Tristan, and Libius Diosconius, Gawayne's son. The repeated editions of such romances in the course of the sixteenth century must have rendered the name of Gawayne familiar to all, and at length, by the natural course of all popular literature, the ballad-makers succeeded the minstrels in the commemoration of his exploits. Perhaps one of the latest passages in which his name is used as a bye-word occurs in Laneham's amusing account of the actors in the Coventry pageant before Queen Elizabeth at Kenilworth:—"But aware! keep bak, make room noow, heer they cum! And fyrst captin Cox,—an od man, I promiz yoo,—by profession a mason, and that right skilfull; very cunning in fens, and handy as Gawin, for hiz tonsword hangs at his tablz eend*.” And a little further on, among the books which the same worthy had “at hiz fingers endz,” he mentions “Syr Isenbras, Syr Gawyn, and Olyver of the Castl.” Indeed there can be little doubt that Sir Gawayne was the prototype which furnished to Spenser the character of his Sir Calidore,

In whom it seemes that gentleness of spright
And manners mylde were planted naturall,
To which he adding comely guize withall,
And gracious speach, did steale mens hearts away ;

And well approv'd in batteilous affray,
That him did much renowme, and far his fame display.

Faerie Queene, B. vi. c. 1. st. 2.

Having dwelt so long on the subject of our Hero's fame in England, it is scarcely necessary to add, that in southern Scotland the popularity of his exploits could not have been less, since he there was claimed as one of their own chieftains, the Lord of Galloway. The Scottish poems published in the present volume will best show how he was regarded by the writers of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, but they also prove, that these writers were indebted to Anglo-Norman romance-literature for nearly all that they knew of him. This is an important fact in the history of Scottish literature, and hitherto has not received the attention it deserves. The same remark may extend to Wales, as proved by the publication of the Mabinogion.

If we now look towards Germany, we shall find at an early period the romances of the Round Table received there, as borrowed from the French originals. Hartman von Owe translated the Chevalier au Lion at the commencement of the thirteenth century†,

* Letter on the entertainment of the Queen at Kenilworth, p. 34, 1575. 12mo. Oliver of the Castle is a mistake for, or corruption of, Oliver of Castille.

† Printed in Müller's Sammlung, vol. ii. 4to, 1785.

and at the same period Wolfram von Eschenbach composed his romances of Parzival and Titirel from the authority of Kyot of Provence*. The proper names in these are very much altered, and other liberties taken, but in the German Parzival, as in the French text, Sir Gawayne occupies the larger share of the poem. Goldast in his Parænetica, p. 377, quotes a distich from a German poem intitled by him Historia Gewani, but in all probability it is taken from the Parzival†. In the "Altdeutsche Blätter" are also printed three fragments of old German romances from MSS. of the 13th, 14th, and 15th centuries, relating to Gawayne, but it is doubtful to what works they belong‡. The same personage is mentioned in the romance of Lohengrin, which belongs to the same cycle§, as well as in the romance of Wigolais, by Wirnt von Gravenberg, of which I have spoken in my Notes, (p. 347.) Towards the end of the fifteenth century a cyclic compilation from the Round Table narratives was made by Ulrich Fürterer, a poet of Bavaria, and the work is still preserved in manuscript at Munich and Vienna||.

Among the Flemish poets the adventures of Gawayne were equally well known, and at as early a period. They are referred to by Jacob von Maerlant, (who died about the year 1300,) in his Alexandreis, and also by Jan de Helu, who was his contemporary, and by Jan de Clerk, who died in 1350¶. Besides these incidental passages, a poem consisting of 11,300 lines is extant, composed by Penninc and Peter Vostaert in the fourteenth century, in which the exploits of Gawayne are principally narrated, and which is, doubtless, a translation of the French *Perceval. Even in the remoter regions of the North, the romances of Perceval, Ywaine, Erec and Enide, Tristan, and many more of French origin, found their way, and Icelandic versions of them are still preserved in the libraries of Stockholm, Copenhagen, and the British Museum. In the list given by Müller in his Sagabibliothek, vol. iii. p. 484, I find “Valvent, Artus Kappa, Saga,” or Romance of Gawayne, Arthur’s knight, and in the Additional MSS. in the British Museum, No. 4859, is preserved a transcript, with the title, “Nu byriast Valvers [Valvens] þattur, sem var eirn af Artus Kauppum.” It consists only of five chapters, and is evidently a short compilation from the Perceval.

In the southern countries of Europe the Round Table romances seem, comparatively speaking, to have been in far less repute. The Italians, indeed, had translations of the Merlin, the Lancelot, and the Tristan, but, with the exception of the last, they were never generally read, but gave way to the more popular romances of Charlemagne and his Douze Pairs†. Ariosto, however, takes occasion to eulogise the chivalry of Britain:—

Gran cose in essa già fece Tristano,
Lancilotto, Galasso [Galeotto,] Artù, e Galvano.
Orlando Furioso, Canto iv. st. 52.

And another writer of more recent date, Brusantino, in his Angelica Innamorata, also says,—

* Consult the last cited works. Vostaert seems to have completed the poem in the year 1350.

† See Panizzi’s Boiardo ed Ariosto, Essay, p. 151, 12mo, 1830.

E tra i pregiati Artù gia fu e Tristano,
E Bando, e Lancilotto, e 'l buon Galvano*.

But it was reserved for a native of Cremona, at the request of the Loredani family of Venice, to celebrate Arthur's courteous nephew in a distinct work. It is written in ottava rima, and was printed without date at Milan by Peter Martir and his associates, and intitled, "Libro novo de lo Inamoramento de Galvano, etc., composto da il laureato poeta Fossa da Cremona." By Ferrario it is assigned to Evangelista Fossa, but Count Melzi seems inclined to give it to Matteo Fossa, who died in 1516†. Both agree in stating that it is of extreme rarity, and extremely worthless.

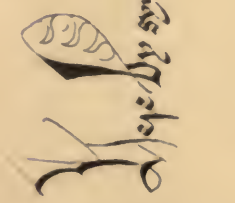

Lastly, among the Greeks of the Eastern Empire we meet with the heroes of the Round Table, whose exploits must have been communicated to them in their intercourse with the Franks. This curious fact is proved by the fragment of a romance written in Greek political verses, a private impression of which was printed at Breslau in 1821, by Von der Hagen, and subsequently reprinted at the end of M. Michel's edition of Tristan, in 1835. Neither of these editors was aware of the fact, that the poem in question is only a portion of a longer romance, translated closely from the Gyron le Courtois of Helie de Borron or Rusticien de Pise, and consequently its composition cannot be assigned to so early a period as the twelfth century, but to the latter half of the thirteenth.

I have now only to add a few words respecting the execution of the present volume. The Glossary has cost considerable labor, and will, I trust, be considered of value, but to those who know the difficulties which attend the explanation of the Northern alliterative poems, its imperfections will not prove matter of surprise. I hope the time may arrive, when the whole of these poems still remaining in manuscript will be published, and I am confident, that until this preliminary step is accomplished, no complete Dictionary of the Northern English can be made. Jamieson's is, indeed, a work of great industry, and his collection of modern Scotisms intitled to considerable praise; but as a critical or etymological guide to the Scottish and Northern dialect of the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth centuries, it is miserably imperfect and inaccurate. A vicious theory pervades it throughout, which a more extensive acquaintance with the mass of vernacular literature still remaining inedited would, I am convinced, have excluded.

The poems here taken from original manuscripts are printed with a scrupulous regard to accuracy, and the abbreviations left as written, but, for the convenience of the reader, a list of these is annexed, and the words are written at length in the Glossary and Notes. The truth is, that editors of our old poetry have, with few exceptions, paid too little attention to the system of writing used by the early scribes, and the consequence is, that but a small portion of all that has been published will bear collation with the originals. I say this advisedly, having myself compared most of the poems edited by Ritson, Pinkerton, Weber, Percy, Ellis, Hartshorne, and others. It is time this were remedied.

I have added to the present Introduction, according to the excellent plan adopted by recent French writers, a description of the Manuscripts used by me, which may not be altogether devoid of interest.

For three of the transcripts from the Percy MS., my thanks are due in an especial manner to George Baker, Esq., the Historian of Northamptonshire, who most kindly undertook to make them for me, which he was enabled to do by the liberal permission of the present possessor of the Manuscript, Ambrose Isted, Esq., of Ecton Hall.

DESCRIPTION OF THE MANUSCRIPTS USED IN THE PRESENT VOLUME.

I. COTTON MS. NERO A. x. A small quarto volume, consisting of three different MSS. bound together, which originally had no connection with each other. Prefixed is an imperfect list of contents, in the hand-writing of James, the Bodley Librarian.

The first portion consists of a panegyric oration in Latin by Justus de Justis, on John Chedworth, archdeacon of Lincoln, dated at Verona, 16 July, 1468. It occupies thirty-six folios, written on vellum, and is the original copy presented by the author.

The second portion is that we are more immediately concerned with. It is described by James as "Vetus poema Anglicanum, in quo sub insomnia figmento multa ad religionem et mores spectantia explicantur," and this account with some slight changes is adopted by Smith and Planta, in their catalogues; both of whom assign it to the fifteenth century. It will appear, by what follows, that no less than four distinct poems have been confounded together by these writers.

This portion of the volume extends from fol. 37 to fol. 126, inclusive, and is written by one and the same hand, in a small, sharp, irregular character, which is often, from the paleness of the ink, and the contractions used, difficult to read. There are no titles or rubrics, but the divisions are marked by large initial letters of blue, florished with red, and several illuminations, coarsely executed, serve by way of illustration, each of which occupies a page.

1. Four of these are prefixed to the first poem. In the first the Author is represented slumbering in a meadow, by the side of a streamlet, clad in a long red gown, having falling sleeves, turned up with white, and a blue hood attached round the neck. In the second the same person appears, drawn on a larger scale, and standing by the stream. In the third he occurs nearly in the same position, with his hands raised, and on the opposite side a lady dressed in white, in the costume of Richard the Second's and Henry the Fourth's time, buttoned tight up to the neck, with long hanging sleeves. Her hair is plaited on each side, and on her head is a crown. In the fourth we see the author kneeling by the water, and beyond the stream is depicted a castle, or palace, on the im battled wall of which appears the same lady, with her arm extended towards him.

The poem commences on fol. 39, and consists of one hundred twelve-line stanzas, every five of which conclude with the same line, and are connected by the iteration of a leading expression. It commences thus :—

Perle plesaunte to prynces paye,
 To clanly clos in golde so clere,
 Oute of oryente I hardely saye
 Ne proued I neuer her precios pere ;
 So rounde, so reken in vche araye,
 So smal, so smothe her syde; were,
 Quere so euer I iugged gemme; gaye
 I sette hyr sengeley in synglure.
 Allas ! I lefte hyr in on erbere,
 Pur; gresse to grounde hit fro me got ;
 I dewyne for dowed of luf daungere,
 Of þat pryuy perle w'outen spot.

The writer represents himself as going in the month of August to seek his pearl or mistress, and falling asleep in a flowery arbour. He is carried in his vision to a stream near a forest, which flows over pebbles of emeralds and sapphires. On the other side he perceives a chrystal cliff, and “ a mayden of menske ” sitting beneath.

At the fote ther of ther sete a faunt,
 A mayden of menske ful debonere ;
 Blysnande whyt wat; hyr bleaunt,
 I knew hyr wel, I had sene hyr ere.
 As glysnande golde þat men con schere,
 So schon þat schene an vnder schore ;
 On lenghe I loked to hyr pere,
 Þe lenger I knew hyr more & more.

The lady rises and approaches him, and in answer to his inquiries blames him for supposing her lost. He wishes to pass the stream, but is told he may not till after death. The lady thence takes occasion to instruct him in religious doctrines, which are of a mystical tendency. The celestial Jerusalem is then pointed out to him, and he beholds a procession of virgins going to salute the Lamb. The lady leaves him to take her place among them; and on his attempting to jump into the stream to follow her, he awakes. The poem concludes on fol. 55^b.

2. Then follow two more illuminations; in the first of which Noah and his family are represented in the ark; in the second the prophet Daniel expounding the writing on the wall to the affrighted Belshazzar and his queen. These serve as illustrations to the second poem, which begins at fol. 57, and is written in long alliterative lines.

Clannesse who so kyndly cowþe commende,
 & rekken vp alle þe resown; þ' ho by riȝt askeȝ,
 Fayre formeȝ myȝt he fynde in forering his speche,
 & in þe contrare kark & combraunce huge.

The first part of this poem is occupied with the parable of the marriage-feast, as applicable to cleanness of life. In the second is related the fall of the angels, the creation, and principal events of scripture history to the destruction of Sodom, after which follows a long passage on the birth of Christ, and reflexions of a moral character. The third part embraces the history of Daniel; and concludes on fol. 82.

3. Two illuminations precede, as before; one of which represents the sailors throwing the prophet Jonas into the sea, the other depicts the prophet in the attitude of preaching to the people of Nineveh. The poem is in the same metre as the last, and commences thus, fol. 83:—

Paciencie is a poynt, þaȝ hit displese ofte;
 When heuy herttes ben hurt wyth heȝyng, other elles,
 Suffraunce may aswagen hem, & þe swelme lethe,
 For ho quelles vche a qued, & quenches malyce.

It is occupied wholly with the story of Jonas, as applicable to the praise of meekness and patience; and ends on fol. 90.

4. The Romance intitled by me Syr Gawayn and the Grene Knyȝt follows, fol. 91. Prefixed is an illumination, of which an outline engraving is given at p. 18 of the present volume, and needs no further description, except that here and elsewhere the only colors used are green, red, blue, and yellow. A facsimile of the first page of the poem itself is also annexed. It ends on fol. 124^b, and at the conclusion, in a later hand is written "Hony foit ȝ mal penc," which may, perhaps, allude to the illumination on the opposite page, fol. 125, representing the stolen interview between the wife of the Grene Knyȝt and Syr Gawayne. (See p. 45.) Above the lady's head is written :

Mi mind is mukul on on, þ' wil me noȝt amende,
Sum tîme was trewe as ston, & fro schame couȝe hir defende.

It does not appear very clearly how these lines apply to the painting. Two additional illuminations follow ; in the first of which Gawayne is seen approaching the Grene Chapel, whilst his enemy appears above, wielding his huge axe (see p. 82.); and in the second Sir Gawayne, fully equipped in armour, is represented in the presence of king Arthur and queen Guenever, after his return to the court. (See p. 91.) The form of the helmet worn by the knight is here worthy of notice.

The third and concluding portion of the Cotton volume extends from fol. 127 to fol. 140^b, inclusive, and consists of theological excerpts, in Latin, written in a hand of the end of the thirteenth century. At the conclusion is added Epitaphium de Ranulfo, abbate Ramesiensi, who was abbat from the year 1231 to 1253, and who is erroneously called Ralph in the Monasticon, vol. ii. p. 548, new ed.

II. THE THORNTON MS. preserved in the Library of Lincoln Cathedral, and marked A. 1. 17. It is a folio volume written on paper, in a small and occasionally negligent hand, consisting at present of 314 folios, but imperfect both at the beginning and end, and otherwise much injured by neglect¹. It was apparently compiled by one Robert de Thornton, between the years 1430-1440. The Contents are,

1. Life of Alexander ; in prose. fol. 1.

Beg. downe to þe dyke, and thare he felle, and was alle to-frusched.

At the conclusion we read, "Here endeȝ þe lyf of gret Alexander, conquerour of

alle þe worlde." It is a literal translation of the Latin prose Life, printed at Strasburg, in 1494, and from this or a similar version the alliterative Scottish Romance in MS. Ashmole 44, seems to have been versified.

On the verso of fol. 49 is written in a later hand than the usual text, "Isto die natus fuit, sancta Maria ante [Nativitatem?] Domini nostri Jhesu Christi, Robertus Thornton in Ridaylle, anno Domini M^oCCCLIIJ."

2. Prognostications of the weather, etc., written in a different and more recent hand. fol. 50.

3. Lamentacio Peccatoris. fol. 51^b.

Beg. Alle crystyn men þ' wawkes me bye.

In twenty stanzas of four lines each, written in a later hand than Thornton's.

On fol. 52^b is a rude drawing in pen and ink of a combat between a knight and a giant, executed apparently by the same hand.

4. Here begynnes Morte Arthure. fol. 53.

Beg. Now grett glorious godd | thurghe grace of hym seluene,
And the precyous prayere | of hys prys modyr.

At the bottom of the page is written in red, Espoyez Thornton, } ygl' En espyrance may . . . On fol. 93^b occurs also the name of "Robart Thornton," in a scroll attached to an initial letter, and at the end of the poem occurs, "Here endes Morte Arthure, writene by Robert of Thorntone." A later hand adds, "R. Thornton dictus, qui scripsit sit benedictus. Amen." Bishop Tanner, and after him Ritson and others, have considered Thornton here and elsewhere as the author, but he is evidently only the scribe. In all probability, this Romance is the "gret Geste of Arthure," ascribed by Wyntown to Hucheon. (See Notes, p. 303.)

5. Here by-gynnes the Romance off Octavyane. fol. 98^b.

Beg. Mekylle and littille, olde and ȝynge,
Herkyns alle to my talkynge.

In six-line stanzas. Unfortunately one half of fol. 108 has been torn away. It differs from the Romance printed by Weber, from the Cotton MS. Calig. A. II., but agrees with the copy at Cambridge, among Bp. More's MSS. in the Public Library, No. 690. (Ff. ii. 38.)

6. Here begynnes the Romance off Syr Ysambrace. fol. 109.

Beg. Jhesu Xp'c, Lorde of heuene kynge,
Graunte vs alle his dere blyssynge.

In six-line stanzas. At the end is, "Explicit Syr Ysambrace." It differs much from Copland's edition, reprinted by Utterson in his Early Popular Poetry, vol. i. p. 77.

7. Here bygynnes y^e Romance off Dyoclicyane y^e Emperour & y^e Erle Berade of Tholous, and of y^e Emprice Beaulilione. fol. 114^b.

Beg. Jhesu Criste, God and Lorde in Trynyte,
Onely god and persones thre.

In six-line stanzas. The close of this Romance has been torn away. It is printed by Ritson, Metr. Rom. vol. iii. p. 93, from Bp. More's MSS. in Publ. Libr. Cambridge, No. 690, and a third copy exists in the Ashmolean Museum, No. 45.

8. Vita Sancti Christofori. [Her]e bygynnes y^e lyffe of y^e Story of [S]aynte Cristofre. fol. 122^b.

Beg. Lordynges, if it be ȝowre wille,
And ȝe wille here, and holde ȝow still.

In six-line stanzas. At the end is, "Explicit Vita Sancti Christofori. Thorntone."

9. Syr Degreuaunce. fol. 130.

Beg. Jhesu, Lorde in Trynite
Graunte ȝam heuene for to see.

In eight-line stanzas. At the close is, "Explicit Syr Degreuaunt." The name is printed erroneously Degrenante by Laing, (who conjectures it may be Sir Degore, which it is not,) and Dygamore by Dibdin. Ritson in his MS. Catalogue of Romances, MS. Add. 10,285, Append., mentions another copy as existing among Bp. More's MSS. at Cambridge.

10. Incipit Syr Eglamour of Artasse. fol. 138^b.

Beg. Jhesu ȝ' is heuens kyng,
Gyff vs alle his blyssyng.

In six-line stanzas. There are other copies in MS. Cott. Calig. A. II., and MS. More, 690. It was printed by Chepman and Myllar at Edinburgh, in 1508, and subsequently by Copland, and by Walley, at London.

11. De Miraculo beate Marie. fol. 147.

Beg. Jhesu, Lorde in Trinyte, ȝ' was, and es, and aye schalle be.

In six-line stanzas. The story relates to a wicked knight, who is converted from his sins by a friar.

12. Lyarde. fol. 148.

Beg. Lyarde es ane olde horse, and may nocht wele drawe,
He salbe putt in to þ^e parke, holyne for to gnawe.

At the end is, "Here endys Lyarde." The tale is of an indecent cast.

13. Tomas off Ersseldoune. fol. 149^b.

Beg. Lystyns, lordynges, bothe grete and smale.

In stanzas of four lines each. At the end, "Explicit Thomas of Erseledownne." It is imperfect; part of fol. 152 and nearly the whole of fol. 153 having been torn away. It was printed from this copy by Laing in his Popular Poetry of Scotland, 4to, 1822, and previously had appeared in Scott's Border Minstrelsy and Jamieson's Popular Ballads, from the Cotton MS. Vitell. E. x., and MS. More Ff. v. 48.

14. Here by-gynnes the Awntyrs of Arthure at the Terne-Wathelyne. fol. 154.

Printed in the present Volume, p. 95. A fac-simile of the commencement is annexed, which will shew the general character of the MS.

15. Here bygynnes the Romance off Syr Perecyuelle of Gales. fol. 161.

Beg. Lef, lythes to me,
Two wordes or thre.

In stanzas of eight lines. No other copy is at present known, but it is but of little merit as a composition.

16, 17, 18. Charms for the tooth-ache. fol. 176.

19. Epistola Sancti Salvatoris. fol. 176^b.20. Prayer in Latin, with a Proem in English. fol. 176^b.21. A Preyere off the Fyve Joyes of oure Lady [in] Ynglys, and of the Fyve Sorowes. fol. 177^b.22. Psalmus, Voce mea ad Dominum clamaui. fol. 178.23. Here bygynnys Fyve Prayers to the wirchiipe of the Fyve Wondys of oure Lorde Jhesu Cryste; in Latin. fol. 178.24. Oracio in Ynglys. fol. 178^b.25. A Colett to oure lady Saynt Marye; in Latin. fol. 178^b.26. Oracio in modo Collecte, pro amico: fol. 178^b.27. Antiphona Sancti Leonardi, cum Collecta. fol. 178^b.28. Here begynnnes the Previte off the Passioun of owre lorde Jhesu. fol. 179.

Beg. Who so desyres to fynd comforthe and gostely gladnes.

At the end is written, "Explicit Bonaventure de Misterijs Passionis Jhesu Christi."

29. Incipit tractatus Willielmi Nassyngtone, quondam Aduocati Juris Eboraci, de Trinitate et Vnitate, cum declaracione operum Dei, et de passione Domini nostri Jhesu Christi, etc. fol. 189.

Beg. A, Lord God of myghtes maste, Fadere and Sone, and Haly Gaste, Fader, for þ^a ert almyghty, sone for thow ert alle wytty.

Tanner notices this poem from the present MS., and so does Warton, Hist. Engl. Poetry, vol. iii. p. 9, who with his usual inaccuracy confounds it with Nafsyngton's translation of John de Waldeby's Myrrour, and then assigns the author to the year 1480; although in the Royal Library, British Museum, there is a copy of Nafsyngton's version of the Myrrour, dated in 1418, MS. Reg. 17, C. viii.

30, 31, 32. Prayers in verse. fol. 191^b.

33. Of the vertu; of the haly name of Jhesu. fol. 192.

A translation from Richard Hampole's comment on the verse Oleum effusum nomen tuum, etc.

34. A tale þat Richerde Hermet [made]. fol. 193^b.

Beg. When I hade takene my syngulere purpos, and lefte þ^e seculere habyte.

35. A prayere þat þ^e same Richerde Hermet made, þ^t es beried at Hampulle; in Latin. fol. 193^b.

36. Ympnus, quem composuit Sanctus Ambrosyus. fol. 193^b.

37. De imperfecta contricione. fol. 194.

Beg. Rycherde hermyte reherces a dredfulle tale.

38. Moralia Richardi heremite, de natura apis. fol. 194.

Beg. The bee has thre kyndis.

At the foot of this folio is written "Edward Thornton," in a hand of Henry the Eighth's time.

39. De vita cujusdam puelle incluse propter amorem Christi. fol. 194^b.

Beg. Alswa Heraclides, þ^e clerke, telles.

40, 41. Two Latin extracts from "Richardus Herymyta." fol. 195.

42. A notabille Tretys off the ten Comandementys, drawene by Richerde the hermyte off Hampulle. fol. 195^b.

Beg. The fyrste comandement es, Thy Lorde God þ^a salle loute.

43. Idem de septem donis Spiritus Sancti, Also of þ^e gyftes of the Haly Gaste. fol. 196.

44. Idem de dilectacione in Deo. Also of þ^e same, delyte and zernyng of Gode. fol. 196^b.

45. Incipit Speculum Sancti Edmundi, Cantuar. Archiepiscopi, in Anglicis. Here begynnys the Myrrour of Seynt Edmonde, þ^e Ersebechope of Canterberye. ff. 197–209.

Beg. Videte vocacionem vestram. This wordes sayse saynte Paule.

Edmund Rich, the author of the Latin original of this treatise, died in 1242.

46. Tractatus de dominica oracione. fol. 209^b.

Beg. In alle the wordes þat er stabilled.

47. Poetical address to Christ. fol. 211.

Beg. Jhesu Criste, saynte Marye sonne.

In stanzas of four lines. At the end is, Explicit. Amen. Thorntone. Amen.

48. Another metrical orison, in six-line stanzas. fol. 211^b.

Beg. Fadir, and Sone, and Haly Gaste.

49. Another, to Christ. fol. 212.

Beg. Jhesu Criste, Goddes sune of heuene.

50. Incipit a Meditacione of þ^e Fyve Woundes of oure Lorde Jhesu Criste; in Latin. fol. 212.

51. A Meditacione of the Crosse of Criste; in Latin. fol. 212^b.

At the end is added, "R. Thorntone dictus, qui scripsit sit benedictus. Amen."

52. Moral Poem, in stanzas of four lines. fol. 213.

Beg. When Adam dalfe and Eue spane | Go spire, if þ^u may spede,
Whare was þane þ^e pride of mane | þat nowe merres his mede.

53. Six lines of poetry; perhaps composed by Thornton himself. fol. 213^b.

Beg. Jhesu Criste, have mercy one me.

54. Here begynnes a Sermon þat Dane Joh'n Gaytryge made, þ^e whilke teches how scrifte es to be made, and whare of, and in scrifte how many thynges solde be consederide. fol. 213^b.

Beg. Als a grett doctour schewes in his buke.

55. Hymn to Christ; in four-line stanzas. fol. 219.

Beg. Jhesu, thi swetnes wha moghte it se.

56. Religious treatise, in prose. fol. 219^b.

Beg. Dere frende, wit þ^a wele, þat þ^e ende and þ^e soueraynte of perfeccione.

57. Moral Poem. fol. 222.

Beg. þi joy be ilke a dele to serue thi Godd to paye.

Imperfect at the end, as is the next piece at the beginning, a folio having been here torn out.

58. Treatise on Active and Contemplative Life, fol. 223.

Beg. menne þat ware in prelacye, and oþer also þat ware haly temporalle menne.

59. Prose religious treatise. fol. 229^b.

Beg. Wit thou wele, dere frende, þat þof þou had neuer done syne.

60. Of Sayne Joh'n þ^e euangelist. fol. 231.

Beg. Of alle mankynde þat he made, þat maste es of myghte,
And of þ^e molde merkede and mesured that tyde.

An alliterative poem in stanzas of fourteen lines each, of which the third, fifth, and seventh rhyme, and the second, fourth, sixth and eighth. At the close are six shorter lines, of which the first, second, fourth and fifth rhyme, and the third and sixth.

61. Prose tract on Prayer. fol. 233^b.

Beg. . Prayng es a gracyous gyfte of owre Lorde Godd.

62. De gracia Dei. fol. 240.

Beg. Off Goddis grace stirrand and helpand.

63. Hic incipit quedam reuelacio. A Reuelacyone schewed to ane holy womane now one late tyme. fol. 250.

Beg. Alle manere of thyng þat es by-gunne.

This revelation is stated to have occurred on St. Lawrence's day, 1422, which may assist in determining the age of the Manuscript.

64, 65. Two hymns, in Latin. fol. 258.

66. Here bygynnys Sayne Jerome Spaltyre; in Latin. fol. 258^b.

Adjoined are various Latin prayers. On the margin of fol. 266 is written in a hand of the sixteenth century, "Dorythy Thornton."

67. Religio Sancti Spiritus religio munda. fol. 271.

Beg. Off the Abbaye of Saynte Spirite, that es in a place that es callede Conseyence. A, dere brothir and systirs.

This is the well-known treatise of the "Abbaye of the Holy Goste," generally ascribed by bibliographers to John Alcock, bishop of Ely, who died about 1498. That this statement is erroneous, appears not only from the presumed date of the present MS., but by the fact, that there is a copy of the treatise in the Vernon MS. Bodleian Library, written in the reign of Richard the Second, before Alcock was born! Among the MSS. preserved in the library at Lambeth, No. 432, art. 2, a copy of this treatise is attributed to Richard Hampole, and this statement is not unlikely to be the true one.

68. A religious Poem. fol. 276^b.

Beg. The begynnyng es of thre.

69. Ista oracio que sequitur est de vii. gaudia (sic) beate Marie virginis, per sanctum Thomam et Martirem, Cantuariensem episcopum edita. fol. 277^b.70. Anoper Salutacioune tille oure Lady, of hir fyve Joyes; in Latin. fol. 277^b.71. Ane Antyme to þe Fadir of heuene, w^t a Colett; in Latin. fol. 278.72. Anoper anteme of þe passyoun of Criste Jhesu; in Latin. fol. 278.73. A Colecte of grete pardone oon to Crist Jhesu; in Latin. fol. 278.74. Latin hymn to Christ. fol. 278^b.

At the top of the page is written, "Thorntone. Misereatur mei Deus!"

75. A Preyere to þe wounde in Crystis syde; in Latin. fol. 278^b.

76. Memento, homo, quod sinis (sic) es, a Poem in four-line stanzas, each of which rhymes with the same syllable. fol. 279.

Beg. Erthe owte of erth : es wondirly wroghte,
Erthe hase getyn one erthe : a dignyte of noghte.

77. Hic incipit liber de diuersis medicinis, et primo, pro capite, ff. 280-314^b.

Beg. For werke and vanyte ine þe hede.

This treatise is imperfect, the latter leaves having been wholly or partly torn away. The authority of the Rector of Oswaldkirk is often referred to by the compiler, and the names of Magister Will. de Excestre and Syr Apiltone are also cited.

The scribe and compiler of this volume, Robert de Thornton, is stated by Mr. Laing to have held some situation in the cathedral of Lincoln, and afterwards to have become archdeacon of Bedford, and to have died in May, 1450. The internal evidence of the volume is altogether against such a supposition. From the general contents it appears evidently to have been compiled by a native of Yorkshire, and in all probability by a member of the family of Thornton, which was seated in the Wapontake of Rydale, in the North Riding of Yorkshire, in whose possession it remained till the close of the sixteenth century, as appears by the entries on ff. 194 and 266. Compare the pedigree of Thornton in MS. Harl. 6070, fol. 11, in which the same family names occur. The mention of the Rector of Oswaldkirk and Syr Apiltone concur to prove this conjecture, since Oswaldkirk and Appleton both lie in the same immediate district. Ritson's supposition (Bibl. Poet., p. 107.), that the compiler of the MS. was the same person as Robert de Thornton, Prior of Bardney, in Lincolnshire, is improbable, but it is possible that he may have been the same who was Vicar of Silkeston in the Deanery of Doncaster, in the year 1425. See MS. Add. 11,400, p. 55.

III. MS. DOUCE, now in the Bodleian Library. It consists of eleven folios of coarse paper, written in a large, inelegant, but very legible character, in the reign of Edward the Fourth. The guide-lines for the scribe have been ruled with a rough plummet, and at the bottom of each leaf is a series of signatures in red, beginning with a. i., and ending with b. iii. The large initial letter at the commencement is coarsely colored with red. There are about thirty lines on a page, and no punctuation is used except in the middle of a line. On the inside of the cover appears the autograph of "J. Baynes, Grey's Inn, 1781."

IV. PORKINGTON MS. No. 10. A small quarto volume, written on vellum and paper, in the reign of Edward the Fourth. ff. 211. Its Contents are as follows:

1. Secundum Anticos Grecorum. fol. 1.

Beg. The man þat falleþ syke þe fyrst day of eny moneyþ.

This tract consists of rules for sickness or health on certain days; the lucky and unlucky days; rules for the weather; natures of the planets, etc.; and concludes with a short chronology, from the beginning of the world to the battle of Agincourt, in 1415.

2. A Calendar of the days, hours, and minutes in each montn. fol. 4.

On fol. 4^b occur the names of Griffyth Owen of the county of Carnarvon, and of John Williams, petty constable of the parish of Llanarmon.

3. A Table of the hours of day and night. fol. 5^b.

4. Rules regarding Nativities; in Latin. fol. 6.

5. Explanation of a Calendar made A.D. 1463 (which is missing); of the feast-days, hours of the day, altitude of the sun, etc. fol. 6^b.

6. Rules for venesection, etc., with a figure. fol. 7.
 7. A Table of Eclipses, calculated for the years 1462-1481. fol. 7^b.
 8. For knowlege of the impressions concerning þe wedyr, fol. 8^b.

Beg. Fyrst it ys to know þ^t that the eyere ys deuyded.

9. For to know in what sygne and degre þe mone ys. fol. 11.
 10. Syre Gawene and the Carle of Carelyle. fol. 12.

Printed in the present volume, Append. No. I. There is no title to this romance in the MS. A leaf is out of place between ff. 14 and 15, which ought to be fol. 66.

11. Here begynnnythe a schorte tretice for a manne to knowe wyche tyme of the yere hit is best to graffe or to plante treys, and also to make a tre to bere a maner frute of diuerys colourys and odowrys, w^t many othere thyngys. fol. 27.

Beg. When the mone is in tauro, hit is good to plante treys of pepyns.

12. Some other receipts of the same nature, which may be part of the same treatise. fol. 32.

13. Here begynnnythe the craftte of lymnyng of bokys, etc. fol. 33.

Beg. To temper vermelone to wryte ther w^t, grynde vermelone one a stone.

At the end is added on a scroll the name of the scribe or compiler, "H. Hattun."

14. A Poem without title; in six-line stanzas. fol. 53.

Beg. Louely lordynges, ladys lyke,
 Wyues and maydyns ryallyke.

15. The Tale of Ten Wives; an amusing but indelicate Poem, in stanzas of six lines. fol. 56^b.

Beg. Leve, lystynes to me,
 Two wordys or thre.

16. Complaint of a Lover, in four-line stanzas. fol. 59^b.

Beg. Lord, how schalle I me complayne.

17. Moral Poem, in stanzas of four lines. fol. 61.

Beg. As I went one my playing.

18. Vision of St. Philibert, or Disputation between the Body and the Soul; in stanzas of seven lines; translated from the Latin. fol. 63^b.

Beg. The fadyr of pytte and most of myserycorde.

19. Moral Poem, in stanzas of five long lines and one short one. fol. 79^b.

Beg. Erthe vppon erth is woundyrly wroȝte.

A much enlarged copy of the poem in the Lincoln MS. A. 1. 17. fol. 279.

20. Mourning of the Hare. fol. 81^b.

Beg. Bi a forrest as I gane fare.

A much better and fuller copy than that printed in Hartshorne's Metrical Tales, p. 165; from MS. More, Ff. v. 48.

21. The Knyȝte his wyfe, in couplets. fol. 83^b.

Beg. Ther was a knyȝt in a cu[n]ttre, þ^t ryche man was wont to be.

22. The holly mane sente Marttayne. fol. 86^b.

Beg. As he lay in his wesione.

23. Narracyone of sente Tantene. fol. 87.

Beg. Saynt Antony also manny a tyme.

24. Poetical address to the Virgin; in four-line stanzas. fol. 87^b.

Beg. Off alle þ^e bryddus þ^t euer ȝeyt were.

25. For þ^e molde þ^t ys fallone doune; a receipt in prose. fol. 89^b.

26. Several more receipts of a similar description. fol. 90.

27. Her begynneth þ^e lyfe of þ^e glorus uergyne seynt Katryne, þ^e wyche lyffe was wrytyn of Athanaysus, þ^e gret doctor; in prose. fol. 91.

Beg. In þ^e grete cite of Alexandyr ther was a kynge.

28. A strange prosaical medley; in the form of an epistle. fol. 129.

Beg. A, syre, A, ȝe syr, and ȝe, syr Johne.

29. Be trewe, and holde þ^t ȝe have hyȝt; in stanzas of eight lines. fol. 130.

Beg. Be trewe, and holde þ^t ȝe haue hyȝte.

30. A similar poem, by the same author. fol. 130^b.

Beg. A, dere God, haue I deseryd this.

31. Here bethe the Stacyons of Rome; in prose. fol. 132.

Beg. In Rome bethe ii^c. paresche churchs.

At the end is written, "Explicyt tractus de indulgencia romana siue apostolica."

32. The good wyfe wold a pylgremage; in four-line stanzas. fol. 135^b.

Beg. The good wyf wold a pylgremage
Vnto þe holly londe.

A similar poem to the present, intitled, "How the Goode Wif thought hir Doughter," was edited by me from a MS. in the possession of C. W. Loscombe, Esq., of Pickwick House, Wilts, 8vo. 1838.

33. The Friar and the Boy. fol. 139.

Beg. God þt dyed for vs alle,
And dranke boþe eyselle and galle.

A better and fuller copy than that printed by Ritson, in his Pieces of Ancient Popular Poetry, p. 35; but it omits all the lines after l. 397, and concludes with twenty-one different lines instead.

34. A Poem without title; in stanzas of eight lines. fol. 150.

Beg. As I stod in a ryalle haulle.

35. A ludicrous Poem; in couplets. fol. 152.

Beg. Herkons to my tale þt I schalle here schow.

At the conclusion we read "Explicyt trutallys." A similar strange composition is printed by Hartshorne, p. 145.

36. Epistle to a lady; in couplets. fol. 154.

Beg. Honowre w^{tt} alle mannere of heylle.

37. Have my hert; in eight-line stanzas. fol. 154^b.

Beg. Have alle my hert, and be in peys.

38. Poem without title; in stanzas of four lines. fol. 153^b.

Beg. As I cam by a forrest syde.

39. The Sege of Jerusalem; in prose. fol. 157^b.

Beg. Al men þt wylle here of þe sege of Jerusaleme.

At the end, "Her enddyth þe sege of Jerusaleme."

40. Terms of Venery, etc., taken from Juliana Barnes. fol. 184.

41. Sentences in verse. fol. 187^b.

Beg. Aryse erlly,
And serve god dewoutly.

42. Extracts from Juliana Barnes' Treatise of Hawking. fol. 188^b.

43. Prophecy of Merlin. fol. 192.

Beg. When þ^e cocke in þ^e northe hathe byld his neste.

Printed among the Collection of Ancient Scottish Prophecies, pp. 6–9, reprinted for the Bannatyne Club from Waldegrave's edition, 1603.

44. Letter from Baleser, son of the King "of Sarsyn," to the Duke of "Borgeyne" [Burgundy]. fol. 193^b.

Beg. Balesere, be þ^e grace of Mahounde, sone of þ^e kynge of Sarsyn.

45. This byne þ^e presentacyons þ^t þ^e lordus of þ^e cetty of Vennes haue present to oure fader þ^e pope geneste [agenste] þ^e Torke. fol. 194.

46. A Poem without title; in stanzas of twelve lines. fol. 195.

Beg. Timor mortis conturbat me,
Thys is my song in my olde age.

A different poem with the same burthen, composed by Lydgate, is in MS. Harl. fol. 128^b, and Dunbar also adopted the same refrain in his Lament for the Makkaris, vol. i. p. 211, ed. Laing, 8vo, 1834.

This and the three following articles are written by a different hand.

47. Seven moral lines. fol. 198.

Beg. Dysseyte disseyveth.

48. Carol, or song. fol. 198.

Beg. Mery hit ys in May mornyng.

49. Another. fol. 198^b.

Beg. The ster he schynythe boþ^e nyȝte and day.

50. Carol, or religious poem. fol. 200.

Beg. Why, why, what ys þis, why hit ys.

51. A Christmas carol, in Latin and English. fol. 201.

Beg. Christe qui lux est, etc.
A baby ys borne, vs blys to brynge.

52. Carol. fol. 202.

Beg. Hey, hey, hey, hey, þ^e borrys hede is armȝd gay.

Probably imperfect. It differs much from the Boars-head Carols printed by Ritson and Sandys.

53. Moral Poem, in the form of a dialogue. fol. 203.

Beg. Be a forrest as I gane walke.

At the end is the colophon, "Explycyt Marcy and Ryžttusnis."

54. The Marchand. fol. 207^b.

Beg. Lystons, lordyngus, I yow pray.

It is imperfect, ending with l. 214 of Ritson's edition in Pieces of Popular Poetry, p. 77. It contains many various readings from the printed text.

V. MS. DOUCE. A small quarto volume, ff. 48, written on paper, in the year 1564, and illustrated with rude colored drawings. It contains transcripts of several Romances, apparently taken from editions earlier than Copland's.

1. Here begynneth the hystorye of the valyaunte knyght, Syr Isenbras.

It contains several variations from Copland's edition, but is imperfect, ending with l. 411.

2. Syr Degore.

The MS. commences at l. 415 of Copland's edition, as reprinted by Utterson, and is very imperfect. At the end is written, "Here endeth the Tretyse of Syr Degore." In Heber's sale, Lot 556, was an unique copy of an edition by Wynkyn de Worde, from which perhaps this transcript was made.

3. Jeaste of Syr Gawayne.

Printed in the present Volume, Append. No. II. It commences imperfectly, and at the end is drawn a device of a shield bearing three fleurs de lis, supported by two angels. Beneath are the initials E. B., which are probably those of the transcriber. See Notes, p. 348.

4. Syr Eglamoure.

This is also imperfect. Dr. Bliss has in his possession some fragments of an edition earlier than that of Copland's, which perhaps may have served for the text of the present transcript. At the end of this MS. is a device of the letters IHS, and the date 1564, the period of its completion.

VI. THE PERCY MS. Now in the possession of Ambrose Isted, Esq., of Ecton Hall, Northamptonshire. A minute account of the volume, with a list of the first fifty-nine articles in it, is given in Dr. Dibdin's Bibliographical Decameron, vol. iii. pp. 338-344. I had intended to have completed this list, when indulged with a sight of the volume in 1831, but I was unable to accomplish my wish. Four romance-poems are printed from it in the present Volume for the first time.

VII. MS. RAWLINSON, marked C. 86, in the Bodleian Library, and formerly belonging to Knox Ward, Esq., Clarenceux king of Arms. It is a small folio, and consists of two distinct portions.

The first, extending from fol. 1 to fol. 30 inclusive, is written on vellum and paper in a late hand of the fifteenth century. It contains a long English poem on the Passion of Christ. Prefixed is a rude illumination of the crucifixion.

Beg. Off gostly maters I wylle meve.

At the end is: "Explicit Passio Domini nostri Jhesu Christi, composita a quodam sapientissimo in materna lingua, videlicet Anglicorum, hominibus non intelligentibus scripturarum sensus." And below we read: "Iste liber constat . . . (blot) . . . Wyllm'us Aylsburrey, monachus Sancti Saluatoris de Bermudesay."

The second portion consists of 159 leaves, and is written on paper in a negligent hand towards the close of Henry the Seventh's reign. The principal contents are as follows.

1. Unconnected moral sentences. fol. 31.

Beg. Vtter thy langage wythe good avisement.

2. Policronica; a prose geographical tract. fol. 31^b.

Beg. Josephus of Jewes þ' nobyl was the firste auctour of the booke of Policronica.

3. The tale of Jak and his Stepdame. fol. 52.

Beg. God that died for vs alle.

Printed by W. de Worde, and thence reprinted by Ritson in Pieces of Ancient Popular Poetry, 8vo. 1791. p. 35. Other manuscript copies, all of which differ much from each other, exist in MS. More, Ec. 4. 35. (which was printed by Mr. Wright, in 12mo. Pickering, 1836.) and MS. Porkington, No. 10, f. 139.

4. Four lines of doggerel poetry, in English and Latin. fol. 59.

Beg. Syng I wold, but alas! discedant prospera grata.

5. Fabula; a poem of eight stanzas of eight lines each. fol. 59^b.

Beg. Whenne men motythe of byrdys of gret gentree.

The burden of each stanza is, "pulle of her bellys and let her flye." It is probably composed by Lydgate, but is not found in Ritson's list of his writings.

6. A poem without title, by Lydgate; No. 61. of Ritson's list. fol. 61.

Beg. For helthe of body couere for colde thynne hede.

7. A poem by Lydgate; No. 214. of Ritson. fol. 62^b.

Beg. Beholde, mane, lyfte vp thy eye and se.

8. A Poem consisting of fourteen eight-line stanzas. The subject is an address of Christ to man. fol. 65.

Beg. Late as I wente one myne pleyng.

9. A Poem on the same subject, in eleven stanzas of twelve lines each. fol. 67.

Beg. Thys is Goddis owne compleynte.

Cf. MS. Lambeth. 853. p. 81.

10. A Poem by Lydgate, being a Lamentation of the Virgin on Christ's Passion; No. 201 of Ritson. fol. 69^b.

Beg. In a tabernacle of a towre.

11. A Poem in ten eight-line stanzas, the burden of which is "I wite my self myne owne wo." fol. 71.

Beg. In my youthe fulle wyld I was.

Cf. MS. Lamb. 853. p. 226.

12. A Poem containing the Lamentation of our Lady, in twelve eight-line stanzas. fol. 72^b.

Beg. In a chirche as I gane knele.

13. A Poem in eleven twelve-line stanzas, of which the burden is, "Filius Regis mortuus est." fol. 74^b.

Beg. As Jhesu rewlithe myne recheles mynde.

Cf. MS. Lamb. 853. p. 74.

14. Fabula; a Poem by Lydgate, on the mutability of human affairs, in twenty-two seven-line stanzas. fol. 77.

Beg. The worlde so wyde, the ayre so remeveabile.

Other copies occur in MSS. Harl. 7333, f. 192, 2251, f. 23^b, 2255, f. 14, and Trin. Coll., Cambr., R. 3, 21. On the authority of the first of these, Ritson attributes it to one "squire Halsam."

15. A Poem by Lydgate, in commendation of virtue; No. 95 of Ritson. fol. 79^b.

Beg. As of hony menne gadrene swetnesse.

16. A Poem by Lydgate, against self-love; No. 99 of Ritson. fol. 81^b.

Beg. Towarde thende of frosty January.

Printed at the end of an edition of Lydgate's "Proverbes;" by W. de Worde. See Collier's Catalogue of the Library at Bridgewater House, p. 179, 4to. 1837.

17. A Poem by Lydgate against haste; No *41 of Ritson. fol. 84.

Beg. Alle hast is odious, wher as discrecione.

See another copy in MS. Harl. 2251. f. 77^b.

18. Stans puer ad mensam, made in Engles by the monke of Bery called Lydgate. fol. 86^b.

Beg. My dere chyld, first thy selffe enable.

No. 16 of Ritson. Printed by W. de Worde.

19. A Poem by Lydgate against the forked head-dresses of women. fol. 88.

Beg. Of God and kynde procedethe alle beaute.

Entered by Ritson twice in his list, under Nos. 63 and 157. It is printed by Sir H. Nicolas, at the end of the Chronicle of London, p. 270, 4to. 1827.

20. A Moral Poem, of four seven-line stanzas. fol. 89^b.

Beg. Passe forthe, þ^u pilgryme, and brydelle wele þⁱ beste.

In Shirley's MS. in the Ashmole Library, No. 59, f. 18, is another copy, intituled "Balade moral of gode counsel, made by Gower."

21. A moralle tale of the horse, the goose and the shepe, written by Jhon Lidgate. fol. 91.

Beg. Contrauersies, plees and alle discorde.

Printed by Caxton, and also by W. de Worde. Reprinted from the former edition for the Roxburghe Club, in 1822.

22. Piers of Fullame. fol. 100.

Beg. A mane that louethe fisshyng and foulyng bothe.

Printed in Hartshorne's Ancient Metrical Tales, pp. 117-133, 8vo. 1829, from a MS. in Trinity College, Cambridge. A third copy is in the Public Library, Cambridge, Ll. 4, 14, and a fourth among James's MSS. in the Bodleian Library. It is entered among Lydgate's poems in Ritson's list, No. 48.

23. Here folowethe Colyne Blowbols Testament. fol. 106^b.

Beg. Whanne that Bachus, the myghti lorde.

A ludicrous poem, written in a broad style of humour. I do not know of any other copy.

24. The Complant of Dido. fol. 113.

Beg. Glorie and honowre Virgille Mantuane.

It is falsely ascribed to Lydgate in the MS., and is, in reality, a portion of Chaucer's Legende of Good Women; f. cci.^b, edit. fol. 1561.

25. Landavalle. fol. 119.

Beg. Sothely by Arthurs day
Was Bretayne yn grete nobyle.

This is the Romance of Launfal, but varies very considerably from the copy in MS. Cott. Calig. A. II., printed by Ritson, Metr. Rom., vol. ii. p. 170; and in Way's Fabliaux, vol. iii. p. 233, 8vo. 1815. Another copy is in the Lambeth MS. 305. f. 73; and a modernised text is preserved in the Percy MS.

26. The Weddyng of S^t Gavene and Dame Ragnelle. fol. 128^b.

Printed in the present volume, Appendix, No. VIII. This is the identical poem referred to erroneously by Warton as existing in one of the Tanner MSS. (See Notes, p. 358.) For its discovery, (after the greater part of the sheets of this work was printed off,) I am indebted to the Rev. Henry O. Coxe, Assistant Librarian of the Bodleian Library, who most kindly and promptly undertook a transcript, which was subsequently compared by myself with the Manuscript. It is, unquestionably, the original of the mutilated poem in the Percy folio, and is sufficiently curious to render its insertion in the Appendix an object of interest, although, had I been earlier aware of its existence, some change would probably have been made in the arrangement. The title in the MS. is added by a later hand, and the poem itself is very carelessly written, so that several lines appear occasionally omitted. An entire page, containing lines, is, unfortunately, wanting.

27. Tabula; a Poem by Lydgate; No. 120, of Ritson. fol. 141.

Beg. Ther is fulle lytel sicurnesse.

The burden of this poem, which consists of nine eight-line stanzas, is, "That now is hay summe tyme was grasse." Ritson inserts it in his list, No. 120, on Speght's authority, but gives no reference to any MS.

28. Gwyscard and Segismonde. fol. 142^b.

Beg. Prol. O wofulle worlde, deceyver of mankynde.
— Work. Whylome was ther an hyghe and myghty prynce.

It differs from the version of this story by Walter, of which a MS. copy exists in Trin. Coll. Cambr. R. 3.20, and which was printed by W. de Worde. See Ritson's Bibl. Poet. p. 108.

29. Poem, consisting of six stanzas of seven lines each. fol. 155^b.

Beg. Myne hert is set vppone a lusty pynne.

At the end is, "Finis, quod Quene Elyzabeth;" by whom must be meant the queen of Henry the Seventh; but she is not mentioned as an authoress by Walpole.

30. Grysille. fol. 156^b.

Beg. Ther is ryghte atte west syde of Italie,

This is the Clerke of Oxenford's Tale, in Chaucer, f. xli^b, edit. Speght, 1602.

31. Latin verses. fol. 174.

Beg. Carmina qui letus cecini, cano tristia mestus.

32. Poem in seven-line stanzas, on the murder of a child by the Jews. fol. 174^b.

Beg. O goode Lorde, thyne name how mervelous.

This is the Prioresses Tale, in Chaucer, f. lxxv. edit. 1602. It is, however, included among Lydgate's writings in MSS. Harl. 2251, f. 69^b, and 2382, f. 97; whence Ritson has carelessly inserted it in his list, No. 239.

33. Poem on the Expedition of Henry the Fifth into France. fol. 178.

Beg. God that alle this world gane make.

Attributed to Lydgate in MS. Harl. 565, f. 502; and thence printed by Sir H. Nicolas, in the Chronicle of London, p. 216. A large portion was previously printed by Hearne, at the end of Tho. de Elmham, p. 359, from MS. Cott. Vitell. D. XII. At the end of the present copy is written, "Explicit per Johannem Reve Free," who may be the transcriber.

34. Poem on the reigns of the English kings, from William I. to Henry VI. fol. 187.

Beg. This myghti William, duke of Normandy.

Attributed to Lydgate in many MSS., and printed by W. de Worde, 4to. 1530; as also by Hearne, in Append. to Robert of Gloucester, vol. ii. p. 585. A copy in MS. Harl. 2251, f. 2^b, has an additional stanza on the reign of Edward the Fourth.

The Knightly Tale of Golagros and Gawane.

I.

IN the tyme of Arthur, as trew men me tald,
The king turnit on ane tyde towart Tufkane,
Hym to feik our þe fey, that faiklese wes fald,
The fyre þat fendis all feill, futhly to fane ;
With banrentis, barouïs¹, and bernis full bald,
Biggast of bane and blude, bred in Britane. 5
Thai walit out werryouris, with wapinnis to wald,
The gayest grumys on grund, with geir þat myt gane,
Dukis, and digne lordis, douchty and deir ;
Sembillit to his fūmovne, 10
Renkis of grete renovne, Of gold þat wes cleir.
Cumly kingis with crowne,

II.

Thus the royale can remove, with his Round Tabill,
Of all riches maift rike, in riall array ; 15

Wes neuer fundun on fold, but fenzeing or fabill,
 Ane farayr floure on ane feild of fresch men, in fay,
 Farand on thair stedis, stout men and stabill ;
 Mony sterne our the streit stertis on stray.
 Thair baneris schane with the sone, of filuer and fabill, 20
 And vthir glemyt as gold, and gowlis fo gay ;
 Of filuer and saphir schirly þai schane ;
 Ane fair battell on breid,
 Merkit our ane fair meid, Our fellis, in fane.
 With spurris spedely þai speid, 25

III.

The king faris with his folk, our firthis and fellis,
 Feill dais or he fand of flynd or of fyre ;
 Bot deip dalis bedene, dovnis and dellis,
 Montains and marresse, with mony rank myre ; 30
 Birkin bewis about, boggis and wellis,
 Withoutin beilding of blis, of bern, or of byre ;
 Bot torris, and tene wais, teirfull quha tellis.
 Tuglit and travalit thus trew men can tyre,
 Sa wundir wait wes the way, wit ye but wene ; 35
 And all thair vittalis war gone,
 That thay weildit in wone ; þ^t1 fuld thair bute beñ.

With torris and turatis, teirfull to tell,
 Bigly batollit about with wallis fa he ;
 The yettis war clenely keptit with ane castell ;
 Myght none fang it with force, bot foullis to fle. 45
 Than carpit king Arthur, kene and cruell,
 " I rede we fend furth ane faynd¹ to yone ciete,
 And afk leif at the lord, yone landis fuld leid,
 That we myght entir in his toune,
 For his hie renoune, For money to meid."

IX.

Thair with the grume, in his grief, leit gird to schir Kay, 105
 Fellit the freke with his fist, flat in the flure ;
 He wes fa astonayt with the sfrac, in ftede quhare he lay
 Stok still as ane ftane, the fterne wes fa fture !
 The freik na forthir he faris, bot foundis away ;
 The toþir drew hym on dreigh, in derne to the dure ; 110
 Hyit² hym hard throu the hall, to his haiknay,
 And fped hym on fpedely, on the spare mure.
 The renk restles he raid to Arthour the king ;
 Said, " lord, wendis on your way,
 Yone berne nykis yow with nay ; It helpis na thing."
 To prife hym forthir to pray,

 Befor^o þe Carll^o wyfe was he fett; 405
 So moche his love was on her^o lyȝt,
 Of all þe fop he ne myȝt,
 Nodyr^o drynke nor^o ette.
 The Carle fayde, " G. comfort þe,
 For fynn ys fwete, & þ^t I fe, 410
 Serten I the hete ;
 Sche ys myn þ^u woldyft w^o thynn,
 Leve feche þoȝtt^o, & drenke þe wyne,
 For her^o þ^u schalt nott geytt."
 Syr G. was a-fchēmyde ī his þowȝt, 415
 The Carll^o dovȝtt^o forthe was brovȝt,
 That was fo feyr^o and bryȝt ;
 As gold wyre schynyde her^o here,
 Hit cost a Mli. and mar^o,
 Her^o a-parreft pertly pyȝte. 420
 Wtt ryche stonn^o her cloþ^o w^o fett,
 Utt ryche perll^o a-bout her^o frete,
 [fol. 22.] So femly was that fyȝte ;
 Ouyr^o all þe haft gafn fche leme,
 As hit wer^o a fon^o-beme, 425
 That stonn^o schone fo bryȝt.
 Then feyde þe Carle to þ^t bryȝt of ble,
 " Uher ys þi harpe þ^u schuldift have broȝt w^t þe, Uhy haft þ^u hit for-gette ?"
 A-non hit was fett in to þe haft, 430
 And a feyr^o cher^o wtt all,
 Be-for^o her^o fador was fett.
 The harpe was of mafer^o fyne,
 The pȝnys wer^o of golde, I wene,
 Serten wtt out lett; 435
 Furst fche harpyd, & fethe fonge,
 Of love, & of Artorr^o arm^o a-monge,

How þey to-geydor⁹ mett.
 Uhē they hade fovpyde, & mad hem glade,
 The beſchope ī to his chambur⁹ was lade, 440
 Utt hym f Key þ^e kene ;
 They toke f G. wtt out leffynge,
 To þ^e Carl⁹ chāb⁹ þⁱ gā h̄y brynge,

 That was fo feyr⁹ and bryȝt ;
 Uhē þ^e bed was made wtt wyne,
 The Carle bade his oun lady go in,
 That loufefom was of fyȝte. 450
 A ſquyer⁹ came wtt a p⁹vey far⁹,
 And he vn-armyde Gawen þer⁹,
 Schaply he was vn-dyȝt ;
 The Carle ſeyde, “ fyr Gawene,

 And kys her⁹ in my fyȝte.”
 Syr G. anſſwerde hyme a-non,
 “ Syr, þⁱ byddyng ſchalt be donne,
 Sertaynly in dede ;

 To the bede he went fuſt ſone,
 Faſt and that good ſpede.
 For ſoftnis of þ^t ladys fyde,
 Made G. do his wytt þ^t tyde,
 Ther of G. toke þ^e Carle goode hede ; 465
 Uhē G. wolde haue doñ þ^e p⁹vey far⁹, Thē ſeyd þ^e Carle, “ whoo ther⁹ !

 "Now G." q' þ^e Carle, "holst þ^e well payde?"
 "ȝe, for gode, lorde," he fayde,
 "Ryȝt weſt as I myȝte;"
 "Nowe," q' þ^e Carle, "I woll to chambur⁹ go,
 My bleffing⁹ I geyfe yow bouthe to, 485
 And play to-geydor all þis nyȝt."

 Syr Key a-rose vppon þ^e morrowñ,
 And toke his hors, & wolde a-goñe,
 Homwarde, as I wenne.
 "Nay, f Key," þ^e beſchope gañ feye,
 "We¹ woll not so wende our⁹ waye, 500
 Tyll we f G. have fene;"
 The Carll a-rofe, oñ morrow a-noñ,
 And fond his byddyng^e reddy doune,
 His dyner⁹ i-dyȝt full cleyne.
 To a mas they lett knelle, 505
 Syr⁹ G. a-rofe, & went þer⁹ tyll,
 And kyft þat lady bryȝt & cler⁹;

"Mare, m'ce!" seyde þ^t lady bryȝt,
 "Uher^o I schalt fe enny mor^o þis knyȝt,
 That hathe ley my body fo ner^o?" 510
 Uhē þ^e mese was doune to ende,
 Syr^o G. toke his leve to wende,
 And þonkyde hym of his cher^o;
 "Furst," fayde þ^e Carle, "ȝe schalt dynn,

No. II.

The Feaste of Syr Gawayne.

* * * * *
* * * * *
* * * * *

[MS.
Douce.
fol. 15.]

And fayde, "I dreede no threte ;
I haue founde youe here in my chafe,"—
And in hys armes he gan her brace,
With kyfsynge of mowthes fweete.
There Syr Gawayne made such chere, 5
That greate frendeshyp he founde there,
With that fayre lady so gaye ;
Suche chere he made, and fuche femblaunce,
That longed to loue he had her countenance,
With oute any more delaye. 10
He had not taryed with her longe,
But there came a knyght tall and stronge,
Vnto the paulyon he wente ;
He founde Syr Gawayne with that lady fayre,—
"Syr knyght, thow makest an euyll repayre, 15
That wyll make the fhente.
Yt ys my doughter that thow lyst by,
Thowe hast done me great vyllanye,
Amende yt mayst thou nought ;
Thou haste greate fortune with that dame, 20

Tyll nowe neuer man coulde for fhome,
 I fee, Syr knyght, that thou hast wrought.
 Wherefore I fee fortune ys thy frynde,
 But hastely vnto harnes nowe thou wynde,"
 Than fayed that bolde knyght ; 25
 " Thou hast done me mnche dyshonoure,
 And may not amende yt, by Mary floure !
 Therefore hastelye the dyght."
 Than bespake Syr Gawayne, and thus he fayde,
 " I suppoſe I haue the loue of the mayde, 30
 Suche grace on her haue I founde ;
 But and youe be her father deere,
 [fol. 15^b.] Syr, amendes nowe wyll I make here,
 As I am to knyght-hode bounde.
 Nowe all forewardes I wyll fullfyll, 35
 And make amendes youe vntyll,
 And lette me pafse quyte ;"
 " Naye," fayed the olde knyght than,
 " Fyrst wyll we afsaye oure myghtes as we can,
 Or elſe yt were a dyſpyte." 40
 Nowe fayde Gawayne, " I graunte yt the,
 Sythe yt none otherwiſe wyll be,
 [Here is inserted a drawing.]
 [fol. 16.] Nedes muſt that nedes ſhall ;"
 He toke hys ſtronge horſe by the brydle,
 And lyghtly lepte in to the ſaddle, 45
 As a knyght good and royall.
 He toke a ſpere that was greate and ſtronge,
 And forthe he wente, a large furlonge,
 And turned hys horſe with mayne ;
 They feutred theyr ſpeares, theſe knyghtes good, 50
 And ruſhed together with eger moode,
 Aboue on the mountayne.
 Gawayne ſmotte thys knyght ſo foore,
 That hys horſe with ſtrenght he ouerthrewe thore,
 And on the grounde he laye vpriht ; 55

Syr Gawayne turned hys horfe agayne,
 And sayde, "fyr knyght, wyll ye any more fayne?"
 "Naye," he fayed, for he ne myght.
 "I yelde me, Syr knyght, in to thy hande,
 For thou arte to styffe for me to stande, 60
 My lyfe thou graunte me;"
 "On thys couenaunte," Syr Gawayne fayde,
 "That ye do no harme vnto the mayde,
 I am a-greed that yt so be.
 Also ye fshall fwere on my fwerde here, 65
 That none armes agaynst me ye fshall beare,
 Neyther to daye nor to nyght;
 And then take your horfe, and wende your waye,
 And I fshall do the best that I maye,
 As I am a trewe knyght." 70
 There thys knyght fware, and dyd pafse,
 Syr Gylbert called he was,
 A ryche earle, styffe and¹ ftoure;
 He fayde, "Syr knyght; take good kepe,
 [fol. 16^b.] For better fhalt thou be afsayled or thou flepe, 75
 With many a fharpe fhoure."
 Than fayd Gawayne, "I beleue right well,
 Whan they come, youe fshall here tell
 Howe the game fshall goo;
 I am nowe here in my playnge, 80
 I wyll not go awaye for no threatynge,
 Or that I will feele more woo."
 Than Syr Gylberte wente hys waye,
 Hys horfe was gone downe the valaye,
 On foote he must hym abyde; 85
 He yode downe, without wordes more,
 The strokes greaued hym full foore,
 That bated muche hys pryde.
 Syr Gawayne had fmytten hym in the fholder-blade,

¹ in?

After hys walkynge the blode out fhade, 90
 He rested hym vnder a tree ;
 He had not rested hym but a lyttell fpace,
 But one of hys fonnes came to that place,
 Syr Gyamoure called was he.

“ Father,” he fayde, “ what ayleth youe nowe ? 95
 Hathe any man in thys forrest hurte youe ?
 Me thynke full faste ye blede ;”

“ Yea, fonne,” he fayde, “ by goddes grame !
 A knyght hath done me spyte and fshame,
 And lost I haue my stede. 100

Also he hath layne by thy syster, by the rode !
 That greueth me more than fhedyng of my blode,
 And the despyte was well more ;
 And he hath made me to sweare,

That to daye none armes shall I beare, 105
 A-gaynst hym, by goddes ore !”

[fol. 17.] “ Father, nowe be of good chere,
 And I fhall rewarde hym, as ye fhall here,
 As I am a trewe knyght!

He fhall beate me, or I fhall beate hym, 110
 I shall hym beate be he neuer fo grymme,
 And hys death to-dyght.”

“ Lett be, fonne Gyamoure, nowe I the praye,
 Thou speakest more than thou maye,
 That fhalt thoue feele foone ; 115

There fhalt thoue mete with a knyght fstronge,
 That wyll paye hys lyueray large and longe,
 Or thy iourney be all done.”

“ NOWE farewell, father,” Gyamoure fayde, 120
 He toke the waye to hys fyster the mayde,
 As fast as he myght on the gate ;
 Vnto the paulyon he toke the waye,
 There as Syr Gawayne and hys fyster laye,
 That thought on no debate.

"A-ryfe," he fayed, "thou knyght stronge of hande, 125
 And geue me battaylle on thys lande,
 Hye the fast anone right;
 Thou hast hurte my father to-daye,
 And layne by my fyster, that fayre may,
 Therefore thy deathe ys dyght." 130
 Than fayde Gawayne, "though yt be fo,
 A-mendes I wyll make or that I goo,
 Yf that I haue myfdone;
 Better yt ys nowe to accorde right,
 Than we two nowe in battayll fhulde fyght, 135
 Therefore go from me foone."
 "Nay," fayed Gyamoure, "that fhall not bee,
 [fol. 17^b.] That daye, knyght, fhalt thou neuer fee,
 For to suffer fuche a fkorne;
 A-ryfe in haste, and that anone, 140
 For with the wyll I fyght alone,
 As god lett me be borne!"
 Gawayne fawe no better bote,
 And wyghtelye he lepte on foote,
 Hys horfe was fast hym bye; 145
 In to the faddle wightelye he fprente,
 And in hys hande hys fpeare he hentte,
 [Here is inserted a drawing.]
 [fol. 18.] And loked full egerlye.
 Eyther turned hys horfe than a-waye,
 A furlonges lenght, I dare well faye, 150
 Aboue on the mountayne;
 They ranne together, thofe knightes good,
 That they horfes fydes ranne on bloode,
 Eyther to other, certayne.
 What nedeth nowe more tale to tell? 155
 Gawayne fmotte hym with hys fpeare fo well,
 That he fell flatte to the grounde;
 Hys horfe was fyers, and went hys waye,
 And hurte was the knyght there as he laye,

Syr Gawayne asked hym in that ffounde. 160
 "Syr knight, wyll ye any more?"
 "Naye," he fayde, "I am hurte fo fore,
 I maye not my felfe welde;
 I yelde me, fyr knyght, and faue my lyfe,
 For with the I wyll no more stryffe, 165
 For thowe hast wonne the felde."
 "Syr, on thys couenaunte I the graunte,
 So ye wyll make me faythe and warraunte,
 To-daye agaynst me no armes to beare;
 Swear thys othe on my fwearde bright."— 170
 "Yes," he fayde, "I wyll, as I am trewe knight,
 That thys daye I wyll not youe deare.
 Nowe fare well, knyght, fo god me amende!
 For I fee fortune ys thy greate frende,
 That fheowith in the to-daye; 175
 There ys no bote to stryde¹ agayne,
 For thou arte a knyght full stronge of mayne,
 Fare well, and haue good daye."
 Thus Gyamoure wente downe the mountayne hye,
 [fol. 18^b] On foote he wente full werelye, 180
 Hys father soone hym spyed;
 "A! wellcome," he fayed, "my fonne Gyamoure,
 Me thynke thou hast not fpede well thys stoure,
 That full well I fee thys tyde.
 Thou went on horfe-backe, lyke a good knyght, 185
 And nowe I see thou arte dolefully dyght,
 That maketh all my care;"
 "Father," he fayde, "yt wyll none otherwife be,
 Yonder knyght hath wonne me in warre fo fre,
 And hathe wounded me full fore. 190
 Forfothe," fayde Gyamoure, "I wyll not lye,
 He ys a stronge knyght, bolde and hardye,
 Of Arthures courte I trowe he ys;

¹ stryve?

I fuppose on of the Rounde Table,
 For at nede he ys both stronge and hable, 195
 So haue I founde hym, withouten myfse."
 Right so as they spake the one to the other,
 There came to them the seconde brother,
 Syr Tyrry was hys name ;
 He came rydyng on a iolye courfyer, 200
 Dryvinge by leapes, as the wylde fyer,
 The knyght was of good fame.
 He was not ware of hys father deare,
 But hys brother called hym neare,
 And sayde, " Syr, nowe abyde ;" 205
 He than turned hys horfe, that knyght so gaye,
 By leapes out of straye,
 Hys hearte was full of pryde.
 Than founde he hys father all blodye,
 And hys brother was wounded fyckerlye, 210
 In hys hearte he began to be fyke :
 [fol. 19.] " A! fyr, who hath wounded youe ?" quod he,
 " A-venge on hym nowe wyll I be,
 That fhall hym myflyke."
 " I wys, fonne, yt ys a knyght stronge, 215
 That hath done vs thys wronge,
 Aboue on the mountayne ;
 He hath me wounded pafsyng foore,
 And I trowe thy brother he hathe well more,
 And by thy syster he hathe layne. 220
 Therefore go nowe, as a knyght good,
 And auenge the fhedyng of thy fathers blood,
 As faste as euer thou maye ;
 Loke that thou fayle not for no cowardyfe,
 But mete hym in the myghtyest wyfe, 225
 For he ys good at a-faye."
 " I fee well, father, he ys a knyght stronge,
 But he hathe done youe greate wronge,
 Yt woulde be harde hym to wyne ;

But neuer the later I fhall do my myght, 230
 Hys strenght afsaye nowe I fhall in fyght,
 Yf he were of the deuyls kynne."

THYS knyght Syr Terry turned hys horfe,
 And vpon the mountayne he rode with force,
 As fast as he myght dryue; 235
 He came to the paulyon, with greate pryde,—
 "Haue done, fyr knyght, thy horfe bestryde,
 For with the I am at ftryue."

Syr Gawayne loked out at the paulyon doore,
 And fawe thys knyght armed hym before, 240
 To hym he fayed verelye;
 "Syr, yf I haue ought to youe offended,
 [fol. 19^b.] I am ready to make yt to be amended,
 By mylde mother Marye!"

"Naye, Syr knyght, yt maye not fo be, 245
 Therefore make the ready faste to me,
 In all the haste that thou maye;
 For be god that me dere bought,
 Make a-mendes mayest thou nought,
 Therefore nowe lett vs playe." 250

Gawayne fawe none other bote than,
 Hys horfe he toke as a worthy man,
 And into the faddle he fprente;
 He toke hys horfe with a greate randone,—
 "Nowe, Syr knyght, lette me haue done, 255
 What in youre hearte ys mente."

"Lo! here I am," fayde Syr Terrye,
 "For to the I haue greate enuye,"
 And together gan they dafshe;
 They rufshed to-gether with fuche debate, 260
 That marueyll yt was howe that they fate,
 They gaue fuche a crafshe!
 Syr Terrye fpake in that place,
 And Gawayne fought faste in that race,

And throughe the fholder hym pyght ; 265

And caste hym ouer the horfe backe,

That in the earth hys helme stacke,

That nyghe hys death he was dyght.

Syr Gawayne than fayed on hyght,

“Syr knyght, wyll ye any more fyght ?” 270

He aunswered hym, “naye,

I am so foore hurte I may no more stande,

Therefore I yelde me in to thy hande,

Of mercye I the praye.”

[fol. 20.] “What,” fayde Gawayne, “ys that youre boast greate ? 275

I wende youe woulde haue foughten tyll ye had sweate,

Ys youre strenght all done ?”

“Yea, fyr, in fayth, so god me nowe faue !

Of me thou mayste no more craue,

For all my myght ys gone. 280

Thou haste to-day wonne thre knyghtes,

The father, and two fonnes, that well fyghtes,

Worfhyppfullye vnder thy fhyelde ;

And yf thou maye wynde our eldest brother,

[fol. 20^b.] I call thee the best knyght, and none other, 285

That euer fought in fylde.

For he ys full wyght, I warne youe welle,

He endureth better than¹ doth the steele,

And that fhalte thou soone fee ;

But he be thy matche I can not knowe, 290

Of knyghthode thoue haste no felowe,

On my fayth I enfure thee.”

“Nowe,” quod Gawayne, “lette hym be,

And, Syr knyght, make an othe to me,

With oute any moore repreue."
 Syr Terrye fayde, "therto I graunte,
 Fare well nowe, God be thy warrante,"— 300
 Full weykelye he wente on foote ;
 He lefte neuer tyll he came there,
 Where as hys father and Gyamoure were,
 That carefull heartes had, god wote.
 Than bespake Gyamoure, hys yongest brother, 305
 "Syr, thou hast gotten as we haue, and non other,
 That knewe I well yt shoulde fo be ;"
 "By god !" fayde Syr Terrye, "fo nowe yt ys,
 He ys a deuyll, forfothe ywys,
 And that ys proued on me." 310
 "Yea," quod Syr Gylbart, that Earle fo olde,
 "He ys a knyght bothe stronge and bolde,
 And fortune ys hys frende ;
 My daughters loue he hath clene wanne,
 Therefore I dare well faye he ys a manne, 315
 Where euer that he wende."
 As they thre stode thus talkynge,
 [fol. 21.] They hearde a manne full loude fynge,
 That all the woode ronge ;—
 "That ys my sonne Brandles fo gaye, 320
 Whan he feeth vs in fuche araye,
 He wyll leaue hys fonge."
 By than they sawe the knight comynge,
 A grene boughe in hys hande he dyd brynge,
 Syttyng on a ioilye courfyere ; 325
 Hys horfe was trapped in redde veluett,
 Many ouches of golde theron was sette,
 Of knyghthode he had no peere.
 Also hys horfe was armed before,
 The headde and the brest, and no more, 330
 And that in fyne steele ;
 Hym selfe was armed pafsynge fure,
 In harneys that woulde strokes endure,

- That had bene proued right wele.
 Thys knyght bare on hys hedde a pomell gaye, 335
 Syttyng on hys horse, fertynge oute of the waye,
 By leapes he came aboute ;
 A fhyelde he had, that was of renowne,
 He bare theryn a blacke fawcowne,
 The fhyelde was of syluer withoute. 340
 Also in hys hande a spere he bare,
 Bothe stronge and longe, I make youe ware,
 And of a trustye tree ;
 There was an headde theron of steele wrought,
 The best that myght be made or bought, 345
 And well afsayed had be.
 Theron of pleasaunce a kercheyf dyd honge,
 I wote yt was more than thre elles longe,
 Embrodered all withe golde ;
 [fol. 21^b.] He was a knyght of large and lenght, 350
 And proued well of muche strenght,
 Afsaye hym who so woulde.
 Spurres of golde also he had on,
 And a good fwerde, that wolde byte a-bone,
 Thus came he dryuyng; 355
 Tyll he came there as hys father was,
 Whan he all fawe, he fayde, "alas !
 [Here is inserted a drawing.]
 [fol. 22.] Thys ys an euyll tydyng." 360
 Whan he fawe hys father all blodye,
 And hys two brethern hurte full fyckerlye,
 "Alas !" fayde Brandles than,
 "Who hath done youe fuche a dyspite ?
 Tell me in haste, that I maye yt quyte,
 For my hearte ys wo begone."
 Than saide the father, "sonne, I fhall the tell, 365

 And layne by thy syster also ;
 He beete me fyrst, and them all,

And made vs fwere that we ne fhall,
 Thys daye do hym no wo." 370
 Nowe faide Brandles, " thys ys yll come,
 I enfure youe by my holydome,
 I fhall proue hys myght ;
 Were he as stronge as Sampfon was,
 In fayth fhall I neuer from hym pas, 375
 Tyll the one of vs to death be dyght."
 " Yea, sonne Brandles, thou fhalt not foo,
 Though he haue done wronge, lett hym goo,

 See the, Syr Brandels, there flayne,
 For I warraunte the he wyll endure.
 'The knyght ys stronge, and well fight can,
 And when he hathe at hande a man,
 He wyll do hym none yll ; 385
 But gentle wordes speake agayne,
 And do hym no harme ne mayne,
 Thus gentyll he ys in fkyll."

[fol. 22^b.] " NOWE lette hym be," fayde Brandles than,
 " Sone fhall we fee yf he be a manne," 390
 And fayed " haue good daye ;"
 Streyght to the paulyon he rode,
 That fawe the mayden as fhe ftode,
 That yt was her brother gaye.
 " Syr knyght," fhe fayde, " here cometh one, 395

 Than ye fhall fynde hym, fyckerlye. 400
 Beholde nowe my brother, Syr Brandles,
 He ys in warre full flye, y-wys,
 And that thowe fhalt fynde ;

Me thynke hym pafsynge lyke a knyght,

 "By god!" fayde Gawayne, "he ys full lyke,
 To abyde a buffette, and to fryke,
 And of hys handes a man;
 I fawe not or nowe thys yeares thre, 410
 A man more lyke a man to be,
 By god and by Saynt Johan!"
 Right fo Syr Brandles, the knyght gaye,
 Spake on hyghe, and thus gan faye,
 "Where arte thou, good Squyer? 415

 Thys daye god lende me grace;

For my worde fhall do none aduantage, 440
 Let vs see howe well we can outrage,

 Of knight-hode thou hast no peere ; 445
 I am right gladde thou hast myght,
 But forye I am we lacke the daye-lyght,
 But a-mended ys my cheere."
 They fought together, thofe knightes good,
 Throughe theyr haburgeons ran out the redde blode, 450
 That pytte yt¹ was to see ;
 They fought together with fuche yre,
 [Here is inserted a drawing.]
 [fol. 23^b.] That after flamed out the fyre,
 They fpake of no mercye.
 Thus full longe than gan they fyght, 455
 Tyll at the laste they wanted lyght,
 They wyste not what to done ;
 Than fayde Syr Brandles, that knyght fo gaye,
 " Syr knyght, we wante lyght of the daye,
 Therefore I make my mone. 460
 Yf we fyght thus in the darke together,
 Throughe myfhappe the one myght fle the other,
 [fol. 24.] And therefore by myne afsent ;
 Lett vs sweare on oure fweardes bothe,
 Where that we mete for leyfe or lothe, 465

 " I afsent me therunto," than fayde Gawayne,
 " And ye wyll that yt fo be ;"
 Than fayde Syr Brandles, " I may none other do, 470

 " I holde," fayde Gawayne, " by mylde Marye !
 And thus we make an ende."
 Syr Gawayne put vp hys fwerde than, 485
 " Syr knight, be frende to that gentle woman,
 As ye be gentle knyght ;"
 " As for that," fayde Brandles than,
 " She hathe caufed to day, 'pardye, much fhome¹, Yt ys pyttye fhe hathe her fyght." 490
 " Syr knyght," fayde Gawayne², " haue good daye,

Earlye soone as itt was day,
 The kt dressed him full gay, 80
 Vmstrode a full good steede;
 Helme & hawberke both he hent,
 A long fauchion, verament,
 To fend them in his neede.

Yt was a jolly sight to seene, 85
 When horsse & armour was all greene,
 & weapon yt hee bare;
 When yt burne was harnisht still,
 His countenance he became right well,
 I dare itt safelye swaere.

Yt time at Carleile lay our K: 90
 Att a castle of Flatting was his dwelling,
 In the Forrest of Delamore;
 For sooth he rode, the sooth to say,
 To Carleile he came on Christmas day, 95
 Into yt fayre countrye.

When he into yt place came,
 The porter thought him a maruelous groome,
 He saith, "S^t, wither wold yee?"
 Hee said, "I am a venterous kt. 100

Noe word to him the porter spake,
 But left him standing att the gate,
 & went forth, as I weene; 105
 & kneeled downe before the K:
 Saith, "in lifes dayes, old or younge,
 Such a sight I haue not seene.

For yonder att yo^r gates right,
 He saith hee is a venterous k^t, 110
 All his vesture is greene ;”
 Then spake the K : proudest in pall¹,
 Saith, “bring him into the hall,
 Let vs see what hee doth meane.”

When the Greene K^t came before the K : 115
 He stood in his stirrops streching,
 & spoke wth voice cleere ;
 & saith, “ K : Arthur, god saue thee,
 As thou sittest in thy prosperitye,
 & maintaine thine honor. 120

Why thou wold me nothing but right,

 To come to the Greene Chappell."

All had great maruell y^t they¹ see, 205
 Y^t he spake soe merrilye,
 & bare his head in his hand ;
 Forth att the hall dore he rode right,
 & y^t saw both K : and knight,
 And Lords that were in land. 210

Wth out the hall dore, the sooth to saine,
 Hee sett his head vp on againe,
 Saies, "Arthur, haue heere my hand ;

[p.206.] The Greene K^t away went,
 All this was done by enchantment,
 Y^t the old witch had wrought ;
 Sore sicke fell Arthur the K : 220
 & for him made great mourning,
 That into such bale was brought.

The Q : shee weeped for his sake,

 The Q: a swounding almost fell,

When he was in armour bright,
 He was one of the goodlyest k^{tes}
 Y^t eu⁹ in Brittain was borne;
 They brought S^r Gawaine a steed,
 Was dapple gray, & good att need, 275
 I tell, wth outen scorne.

His bridle was wth stones sett,
 Wth gold & pearle ou⁹ frett,
 & stones of great vertue;
 He was of a furley kind, 280
 His stirropps were of silke of Ynd,
 I tell yo^u this tale for true.

When he rode ou⁹ the mold,
 His geere glistered as gold,
 By the way as he rode ; 285
 Many furleys he there did see,
 Fowles by the water did flee,
 By brimes & bankes soe broad.

Many furleys there saw he,
 Of wolues & wild beasts sikerlye, 290
 On hunting hee tooke most heede ;
 Forth he rode, the sooth to tell,
 For to seeke the Greene Chappell;
 He wist not where indeed.

[p. 207.] As he rode in an euening late, 295
 Riding downe a greene gate,
 A faire Castell saw hee ;
 Y^t seemed a place of mickle pride,
 Thitherward S^r Gawaine can ryde,
 To gett some harborrowe. 300

Thither he came in the twylight,
 He was ware of a gentle k^t,
 The Lo : of the place was hee ;
 Meekly to him S^r Gawaine can speake,
 & asked him for K : Arthurs sake, 305
 Of harborrowe I pray thee.

“ I am a far labored knight,
 I pray yo^u lodge me all this night,”
 He sayd him not nay ;
 Hee tooke him by the arme, & led him to the hall, 310
 A poore child can hee call,
 Saith, “ dight well his palfrey.”

Into a chamber they¹ went, a full great speed,
There they¹ found all thinge readye att need,

I dare safelye swere ; 315
Fier in chambers burning bright,
Candles in chandlers burning light,
To supp they¹ went full yare.

He sent after his Ladye bright,
To come to supp wth y^e gentle kt, 320
& shee came blythe wth all ;
Forth she came then anon,
Her maidē following her eche one,
In robes of rich pall.

As shee sate att her supp, 325

Sr Gawaine shee looked vpon ;
When the supp it was done,
Shee tooke her maids [euery one,]
And to her chamber will gone. 330

He cheered the kt & gaue him wine,
& said, " welcome, by St. Martine !
I pray yo^u take itt for none ill ;
One thing, Sr, I wold yo^u pray,
What yo^u make soe farr this way, 335
The truth yo^u wold me tell.

For his words y^t were soe smooth,
 Had Sr Gawaine wist the soothe,
 All he wold not haue told; 343
 For y^t was the Greene K^t,
 Y^t hee was lodged wth that night,
 And harbarrowe in his hold.

He saith, "as to the Greene Chappell,
 Thitherward I can yo^u tell, 350

The Greene K^t went on hunting,
 Sr Gawaine in the Castle beinge,
 Lay sleeping in his bed;
 [p.208.] Vp rose the old Witche wth hast thowe², 370

 Shee brought her to his bedd.

Shee saith, "gentle k^t, awake,

S^r Gawaine spake mildye in the place,
 He thanked the lady, & tooke the lace ; 410
 & promised her to come againe ;
 The k^t in the forrest slew many a hind,
 Other venison he cold none find,
 But wild bores on the plaine.

 Then to S^r Gawaine thus he said,
 “ Tell me anon in hight¹ ;
 What noueltyes y^t yo^u haue won,
 For heers plenty of venison”,— 425
 S^r Gawaine said full right.

S^r Gawaine sware by St. Leonard,
 “ Such as God sends yo^u shall haue pt,”
 In his armes he hent the k^t ;
 & there he kissed him times 3. 430
 Saith, “ heere is such as God sends mee,
 By Mary, most of might !”

No. IV.

The Turke and Gowin.

[p. 38.]

LISTEN lords, great & fmall,
What adventures did befall,
In England where hath beene;
Of knights that held the Round Table,
W^{ch} were doughty & profittable,
Of kempys cruell & keene. 5

All England, both East & West,
Lords & ladyes of the best,
They buffed & made them bowne;
& when the king fate in feate, 10
Lords ferved him att his meate,
Into the hall a burne there taite¹.

He was not hye, but he was broad,
& like a Turke he was made,
Both legg & thye; 15
& said, "is there any will, as a brother,
To give a buffett & take another,
& iff any foe hardy bee?"

Then spake S^r Kay, that crabbed kt,
 & said, "man, thou seemest not foe wight, 20
 If thou be not adread ;
 For there beene k^{ts} wth in this hall,
 Wth a buffett will garr thee fall,
 & grope thee to the ground.

Gine thou be never foe stalworth of hands, 25
 I fhall bring thee to the ground,
 Y^t dare I safely sweare ;"
 Then spake S^r Gawaine, that worthy knight,
 Saith, "cozen Kay, thou speakest not right,
 Lewd is thy answere. 30

What & that man want of his witt,
 Then litle worfhipp were to thee pitt,
 If thou fhold him forefore ;"
 Then spake the Turke wth words thraw,
 Saith, "come the better of yo^u tow, 35
 Though ye be brenne¹ as bore²."

[Half a page is here torn away.]

[p. 39.] This buffett thou haft

The Turke tooke leave of king wth crowne,
 S^r Gawaine made him ready bowne,
 His armor, & his fteed ; 50
 They rode northward 2 dayes and more ;
 By then S^r Gawaine hungred fore,
 Of meate & drinke he had great need.

The Turke wift Gawaine had need of meate,

NOTES.

Syr Gawayn and the Grene Knyzt.

THIS curious poem is printed for the first time from a manuscript, believed to be unique, preserved in the Cottonian Collection, and marked Nero, A. x. The volume had undoubtedly been seen by Warton, since he quotes some other pieces contained in it¹, and it is singular he should not have noticed the poem in question, which he seems to have confounded with a preceding one, on a totally different subject. The same error, indeed, pervades the Cottonian Catalogues compiled by Smith in 1696, and by Planta in 1802; and to this cause, in all probability, may be ascribed the oblivion in which for so long a period such a remarkable composition should have remained. Accident, however, threw it in the way of Mr. Price, the able editor of Warton, who extracted a passage in illustration of his argument against the Scottish authorship of Sir Tristrem, and announced his intention of publishing the entire Romance, under the designation of "Aunter of Sir Gawaine," in an octavo volume, to be intitled "Illustrations of Warton's History of English Poetry;" but which he relinquished some time previous to his decease². Price, however, omitted all reference to the MS. containing the poem, and the same chance which had brought it under his notice subsequently made it known to myself and to Mr. Stevenson, the latter of whom frequently quotes it in his additions to Boucher's *Glossary*¹. A transcript was made by me shortly after the discovery, and the subject of the romance communicated in October, 1829, to Sir Walter Scott, who with his well-known courtesy, and zeal in the cause of ancient Scottish literature, at once proposed to have it edited, together with the similar poems of The Awntrys of Arthure, and Golagros and Gawane, by subscription. I subsequently received from Sir Walter, during his visit to London, in October, 1831, permission to dedicate the work to himself; and a prospectus was circulated² containing proposals of publication, which circumstances afterwards prevented being carried into effect. To those noblemen and gentlemen who on that occasion sent me their names, I have never hitherto had an opportunity of expressing my thanks, and although tardy they are not the less sincere.

Having said thus much to account for the non-appearance of the poem in print, previous to its being so liberally taken under the patronage of the Bannatyne Club, I shall proceed to discuss briefly the questions which arise respecting the age of this composition, its author, and the sources whence it was derived.

Warton, in quoting two poems in the same volume, written by the same hand as the present, assigns them to the age of Minot, i. e. to the middle of the fourteenth century, and adds, that the writing cannot be later than the reign of Edward III. But the historian of English poetry is too poor a critic in matters of this kind to cause any weight to be attached to his opinion, unless supported by other evidence. His editor, Price, was evidently inclined to give the poem a much greater antiquity, and the whole scope of his argument would refer it to the thirteenth century, previous to the time of Robert de Brunne. "It abounds," says this ingenious writer, in those "selcouth names which in the fourteenth century were rapidly growing into disuse, and which were only retained by the writers in alliterative metre." To refute this notion, which has been adopted too hastily by the Rev. W. Conybeare³ and Mr. Laing⁴, there is abundant evidence in the poem itself, independent of the proofs afforded by the language and metrical structure. Stevenson merely notices that the poem was "probably written about the end of the fourteenth century⁵," and Guest, who is the latest writer on the subject, says, that the MS. "certainly belongs to the latter half of the fourteenth century," which he modifies in another passage to "about the year 1400¹." It will not be difficult from a careful inspection of the manuscript itself, both in regard to the writing and illuminations, to assign it to the reign of Richard the Second; and the internal evidence, arising from the peculiarities of costume, armour, and architecture, would lead us to assign the romance to the same period, or a little earlier. There are three other metrical pieces in the volume², all most unquestionably composed by the author of the romance, and these I have carefully read over with the hope of detecting some more direct indication of the age, but without success. Jean de Meung is indeed referred to, in fol. 71^b, under his surname of Clopinel, in the following lines :

¹ This new edition of Boucher, under the superintendence of the Rev. Joseph Hunter, and Joseph Stevenson, Esq., came out in 1832. Only two parts, extending to the middle of letter B, have hitherto appeared.

² The work had previously been proposed to Messrs. Longman and Co., and Mr. Murray. The former party civilly declined it, but the latter never even took the trouble to answer the letter!

For Clopyngnel in the compas of his clene Rose,
Ther he expoune; a speche to hym that spede wolde,
Of a lady to be loued, loke to hir sone,
Of wich beryng that ho be, & wych ho best louyes. etc.

But as this writer completed, before the year 1300, the Roman de la Rose, commenced by Guillaume de Lorris, it will only prove the popularity of the work in Scotland as well as in England, during the course of the fourteenth century. In another passage the author alludes to a proverbial phrase,

Thay blwe a boffet in blande, that banned peple,
That thay blustered as blynde as Bayard wat; euer.—fol. 69.

Yet since this proverb is also found in Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, nothing can be inferred from the contemporaneous use of a saying, of which the origin is too obscure to assist our inquiry.

In regard to the author of these poems much uncertainty also exists. There is sufficient internal evidence of their being Northern, although the manuscript containing them appears to have been written by a scribe of the midland counties, which will account for the introduction of forms differing from those used by writers beyond the Tweed.

It is, I think, certain, that the writer of the romance must have been a man of birth and education, for none but a person intimately versed in the gentle science of wode-craft could so minutely describe the various sports of the chase, nor could any but an educated individual have been so well acquainted with the early French literature. Of his poetical talent the pieces contained in the manuscript afford unquestionable proofs, and the descriptions of the change of these seasons¹, the bitter aspect of winter², the tempest which preceded the destruction of Sodom and Gomorra³, and the sea-storm occasioned by the wickedness of Jonas⁴, are equal to any similar passages in Douglas or Spenser. The individual who has the best claim to be recognised as the author, is "Huchowne of the Awle Ryale," mentioned by Wynthown⁵, who writes of him thus :

. . . . Men of gud dyscretiowne
 Suld excuse and loue Huchowne,
 That cunnand wes in literature ;
 He made the Gret Gest of Arthure,
 And the AWNTYRE OF GAWANE,
 The Pystyl als of swete Susane.
He wes curiys in hys style,
Fayre of facund, and subtile,
 And ay to plesans and delyte
 Made in metyre mete his dyte⁶.

Mr. Chalmers was of opinion, that this Huchowne and the Sir Hugh of Eglintoun, mentioned by Dunbar in his "Lament for the Makkaris," who flourished in the middle of the fourteenth century, and died it is supposed about the year 1381, were one and the same person ; but there are so many difficulties in this supposition, as justly to prevent our yielding assent to it without some additional evidence⁷. Admitting, however, Huchowne to be the author of the romance⁸, we are sin-

⁵ Wynthown was elected Prior of St. Serf's, in Loch Leven, in 1395, so that he must have been contemporary with Huchowne. His Chronicle was not finished till the year 1420-1424.

⁸ Mr. Guest regards as the most decisive proof of what is here assumed, the fact, that in the void space at the head of the poem in the MS., a hand of the fifteenth century (Mr. G. says, "not much later than the year 1500,") has scribbled the name Hugo de, as shown in the fac-simile annexed to the description of this MS., but, I confess, to this I do not attach much weight. Mr. Guest's wish to regard any signature as the name of the author, has led him into some awkward mistakes, particularly in the case of the English lives of Saints, composed probably in the early part of the thirteenth century, and contained in a MS. written not long after, MS. Reg. 17 A. xxvii., which Mr. Guest gularly fortunate in possessing probably all the pieces written by him noticed by Wyntoun, together with three others on allegorical or scriptural subjects, hitherto not pointed out. It is very evident on the chronicler's authority, that the Gret Gest of Arthure, the Gest Hystoryale, and the Gest of Broyttys auld story, are one and the same poem, and relate to the exploits of Arthur and his knights against the Romans. In this work Huchowne makes Lucius Hiberius emperor, in the time of Arthur, whereas Wyntoun, following other authorities, names Leo as emperor. He first defends himself, and then good-naturedly excuses his predecessor, by saying that in the Brwte, (by which he here means Geoffrey of Monmouth,) Lucius is called Procurator, which was more correct, but that had Huchowne done so,

That had mare greuyd the cadens,
Than had releuyed the sentens.

Had Sir Walter Scott ever read through the Arthur and Merlin of the Auchinleck MS., he would have known that it could not be the Gest referred to in the above passage by Wyntoun; and Mr. Turnbull, the editor of this romance, is less excusable on this account in repeating the error without correction¹. But of what in all probability is the veritable Gest of Arthure composed by Huchowne, and written in alliterative metre, I possess a transcript, from a MS. in Lincoln Cathedral Library, which may, probably, at some future period be given to the press.

It is, perhaps, too much to assume positively with Mr. Guest, that Huchowne "is certainly the oldest English poet, born north of the Tweed, whose works have reached us," since Barbour, who wrote between 1370-1380, possesses equal claims to be so considered; but we have this remarkable fact before us, that the oldest manuscripts containing genuine Scottish poetry, are the Cotton MS., Nero, A. x., the Vernon MS. in the Bodleian library, and a MS. formerly in the possession of Dr. Whitaker, and afterwards of Mr. Heber, all of which are of the reign of Richard the Second, all apparently written in England, and all contain poems of Huchowne². Now if it be supposed that some time must necessarily elapse to account for the transmission of poems composed on the other side of the Tweed to attributes to "one John Thayer" [Theyer], whose name occurs at the commencement, and who was the possessor in the reign of Charles the Second! The whole of Theyer's MSS. were subsequently purchased for the Royal Library. See History of Rhythms, ii. 139, note. In the same page for "Latin original," read "Latin version," as may be proved, perhaps, on some future occasion.

the southern counties, we must then with Mr. Guest give Huchowne the priority over Barbour, and he will stand first in the list of Scottish "makkaris." Of course by this I shall be understood to range myself on the side of those who consider Thomas of Erceldoune's claim to Sir Tristrem as apocryphal. To discuss this subject at length here would take me too much out of my way, therefore I shall only observe in passing, from a passage in the inedited portion of Robert de Brunne's Chronicle, that Kendal's christian name was also Thomas, and that he wrote a "tale" about Flayn, the brother of the giant Shardynge, the lord of Scarborough castle; a piece of information which I believe to be new to all the writers on the subject.

In regard to the peculiarity of Huchowne's stanza and style, it cannot fail to excite observation how well it corresponds with the character given by the chronicler. It has also been ingeniously remarked by Mr. Guest, that the form of the stave, with its abrupt bob-line preceding the wheel, distinguishes the romance of Syr Gawayn and the Pystyl of Sussan from other somewhat similar productions of the fifteenth century, and fairly intitles them to be considered of earlier date¹. The question of the introduction of alliteration into Scotland is a difficult one, as well as the period of its being first used; but I should be glad to have pointed out to me any poem in that metre, previous to the year 1350, composed unquestionably by a native of North Britain. As far as we can at present judge, it must have been borrowed from their southern neighbours, and retained subsequently to the middle of the sixteenth century. Mr. Guest is inclined to place among the earliest specimens the portion of the romance of Alexander, inserted in the splendid copy of the French romance in the Bodleian Library², which he places about the middle of the fourteenth century³. But the writing of this portion is of the reign of Henry the Sixth, nor is there any reason to believe the poem itself very much earlier than the year 1400. A larger portion of the same romance is in a MS. in the Ashmolean Library⁴, and I possess a transcript of a fragment of an English alliterative romance on the same subject, which would appear from internal evidence to have been composed by the author of William and the Werwolf.

Of the sources whence the author has availed himself in composing Syr Gawayn and the Grene Knyzt, it now remains to say something. It is professedly not of his own invention, nor founded upon popular tradition, for he expressly refers at

To my knowledge no English romance of an earlier period than the one before us exists, in which the writer might have found the story he has so ingeniously converted to his own purpose; but on turning to the early Anglo-Norman literature,—an extensive knowledge of which was undoubtedly at this period diffused over Scotland,—I have been more successful. The immediate original of the Grene Knyzt appears to exist in the Roman de Perceval, one of the most celebrated of Arthur's knights, whose adventures were written in verse by Chrestien de Troyes, at the close of the twelfth century, and continued after his death by Gautier de Denet and Manessier, at the beginning of the thirteenth². This romance was translated into prose in the sixteenth century, and printed in 1530. In this it is related, that king Carados of Vaigue came to Arthur's court to ask for a wife, and receives from the suzerain a lady named Ysenne de Carahais. During the ceremonial of the nuptials an enchanter named Eliaures falls in love with the bride, and by magical delusion contrives to take the husband's place. The issue of this intercourse is a son, also named Carados, who is subsequently sent to the court of Arthur by his supposed father, to acquire a knowledge of chivalrous exercises. After a time the monarch resolves to hold a court plenière in the city of Carlisle (Cardeuil), for the purpose of conferring the order of knighthood on his young nephew, and communicates his intention to Gawayne, who highly approves of it. The feast is kept at Pentecost with extraordinary splendor, the ceremony of knighthood takes place, and Arthur, according to his usual practice, is only awaiting some adventure before he proceeds to the banquet, when at this moment a knight hastily rides up, singing an air "bien doucement," whose appearance is thus described:—"et avoit dessus le bonnet un cercle, ou pendoit un chapeau de fleurs, et estoit vestu de satin verd, fourré de erminnes; et avoit une espée sainte, dont puis eust la teste couppee, et en estoient ses renges ou sainture de fine soie, batue en or, et force perles semées par

² Copies of the metrical romance are rare in Great Britain. I have only been able to discover one, in the College of Arms, MS. Arund. 14; but this is imperfect, and does not proceed beyond f. xlvi. of the edition. There is said to exist a second perfect copy in the Advocates Library. dessus." The knight comes to the king, and begs to have a request granted,—to exchange blow for blow. "How is that?" said Arthur. "Sire, I will tell you," replied the stranger, "I will deliver my sword to a knight, before your majesty and all the assembly, and if he is able to cut off my head with it at a blow, in case I should afterwards recover, I will then return him the stroke." Keux, the seneschal, declares he would not accept the proffer for all the world, and brands with the name of fool any one hardy enough to attempt it. The knight, however, persists, and drawing his sword presents it first on one side and then on the other, much to the displeasure of the king, who sees his bravest champions draw back. At last young Carados starts forward, and seizes the weapon. The knight then lays down his head on a block, and Carados, persisting in the enterprise against the wishes of the whole court, raises the sword, and at a blow sends the stranger's head rolling off the length of a lance. The headless trunk immediately rises and takes up the head, which unites as well as ever, and the knight now claims the fulfilment of the conditions, but defers it for one twelvemonth, and on leaving the court reminds Carados strictly to observe the agreement. The court is much troubled at so strange an adventure, and many tears are shed for Carados, who, however, does not seem to regard the peril, but passes the time in feats of arms. At length the prescribed term arrives, and he returns to Carlisle at Pentecost day, when Arthur and his Round Table are assembled as before. The stranger knight again makes his appearance, and demands the accomplishment of the covenant. Carados lays his head on the block, and tells the knight to do his worst. Arthur and his queen both make an effort to save Carados from what appears certain death, but in vain; and the stranger having sufficiently kept them all in suspense, raises his sword, and strikes the neck of Carados, but with the flat side only of the weapon. He then tells him to rise, and reveals to him that he is Eliaures, the enchanter, his real father, and how it was brought about. He afterwards mounts his horse and departs, leaving Arthur and his knights to celebrate their feast in gladness¹.

From a comparison of this narrative with the Scottish romance, we may be better able to judge fairly of the merit of the author of the latter, and how far he has drawn on his own inventive powers for the changes and embellishments of the story.

We meet with an incident of the same kind in the fabliau of La Mule sans Frein, probably of the thirteenth century. In this Gawayne is the hero, and on behalf of a damsel undertakes a perilous adventure. He arrives at the castle of a giant, surrounded by a paling, on which are fixed four hundred human heads. The giant receives him civilly, but when he is about to retire to rest, he is ordered to strike off the giant's head, who warns him at the same time, that on the following morning he will have to suffer a similar blow. Gawayne is nothing daunted, and smites the giant's head off, but is infinitely astonished to see the body rise, take it up, and replace it. He goes to bed, and, strange to say, sleeps tranquilly. The next morning the giant comes with his axe, and awaking Gawayne, reminds him of the disagreeable conditions made the previous evening. The knight holds forth his neck, but it proves to be only a trial of his courage, and the giant praises and embraces him¹. This is evidently the same story as the preceding one, but diversified according to the fancy or memory of the minstrel. A third adventure of a similar description occurs in the second part of the Roman du Saint Graal, ascribed to Helie de Borron, and manifestly composed subsequent to the romance of Perceval. It is there related of Lancelot du Lac, that in one of his rambles he entered the Gaste Cité, from which issues a knight richly clad, holding a huge axe in his hands. Lancelot cuts his head off with the weapon, on the same conditions as Carados. At the appointed time he returns, and a strong and tall knight, brother of the one beheaded, approaches him, habited "de court, comme celluy qui veult faire office," and holding the fatal glayve, which he had just whetted to make it cut sharper: Lancelot prepares to fulfil the conditions, makes a cross on the earth, and kneels down on it. The sole thought that troubles him is of his mistress, queen Guenever. He regrets he had not seen her once more to bid her adieu, and fears death only because it will separate him from her. His tears flow for the first time in his life. He extends his neck, and the tall knight steps back, and aims a blow. Lancelot sees the shadow of the weapon, and eludes it. "Ha!" cried the knight, "my brother, whom you killed, did not act thus, but held his head firm, and so must you do." At this crisis Lancelot is saved by the interference of two ladies from the castle, and the two enemies become friends².

Some points of resemblance will here also be remarked with the Scottish Romance, and it is highly probable that the author may have mingled together several narratives for the purpose of rendering his own more attractive. The series of temptations to which Gawayne is exposed, undoubtedly connects it with another traditionary story of his exploits, which I shall have occasion to speak of when I come to the romance of the Carle of Carelyle.

To one of the preceding sources, in all probability, was Ariosto indebted for his episode of the necromancer Orrilo, whose powers in replacing his limbs when cut off exceed those of Eliaures :—

Se gli spiccano il capo, Orrilo scende,
 Nè cessa brancolar fin che lo truovi ;
 Et or pel crine et or pel naso il prende,
 Lo salda al collo, e non so con che chiovi :
 Pigliat talor Grifone, e 'l braccio stende,
 Nel fiume il getta, e non par ch' anco giovi ;
 Chè nuota Orrilo al fondo come un pesce,
 E col capo salvo alla ripa esce¹.

In the Appendix to the present volume will be found a modern rifacimento of this romance of Syr Gawayn and the Grene Knyzt, printed from the well-known Percy manuscript.

Respecting the claim of the Britons and other nations to a Trojan descent, see the remarks of Thompson, in the preface to his translation of Geoffrey of Monmouth, 8vo, 1748 ; Warton's Hist. Engl. Poetr., vol. i. p. 131, note, and *Diss. on Rom. It is adopted by all the romancers, French and English, and introduced into Spenser's Faerie Queen, b. iii, c. 9, st. 33, 41. Thus also the author of the alliterative Morte Arthur, in the Lincoln MS. A. 1. 17.

Thus endis kyng Arthure, as auctors alegges,
 That was of Ectores blude, the kyng sone of Troye,
 And of sir Pryamous, the prynce, praysede in erthe ;

The authority for this assertion was doubtless the Latin history ascribed to Dares

Phrygius, cap. 39, 174, ed. Delph. 1702, although it is corroborated by the more classical names of Dionysius of Halicarnassus and Strabo. Joseph of Exeter in his poem De bello Trojano, composed in the twelfth century, thus versifies Dares:

Interea questique diu, bellumque perosi,
 In fœdus coiere Phryges; juratur in usum
 Perfidie perjura fides, Antenore dirum
 Parturiente nefas; hujus consulta secuti
 Ucalegon atque Amphidamas, nec justior ipso
 Polydamante Dolon, patriæque in damna ruentis
Impius et tantis Æneas consonus ausis.—lib. vi. v. 705.

The immediate source, however, made use of by the Scottish poet, may have been the popular Latin romance of Guido de Colonna, compiled in the thirteenth century, which subsequently was translated by Lydgate into English verse.

Ibid. l. 11. Ticius to Tuskan [turnes,] & teldes bigynnes.

Unless Ticius is here a mistake altogether for Antenor, the name may possibly have been derived from Titus Tatius, king of the Sabines, and afterwards the colleague of Romulus at Rome. The word supplied is obvious, and rendered certain by several other passages, but I shall only quote one,

In to Tuskane he *tourne*z, whenne thus well tymede,
 Takes townnes fulle tyte, withe towrres fulle heghe, etc.

Morte Arthur, f. 80^b.

This surname seems to be an invention of the writer for the sake of alliteration. I have not met with it elsewhere.

P. 4, l. 31. As tit as I in toun herde.

A phrase by no means unusual. Compare ll. 614, 1049. We may hence reject the emendation of Chalmers, in reading roun for toun in the first stanza of Sir Tristrem. See Works of Sir David Lyndsay, vol. i. p. 128, 8vo, 1806.

Ibid. l. 37. This kyng lay at Camylot, etc.

In Malory's Morte d' Arthur, compiled in 1469, Camelot is expressly declared to be the same as Winchester, b. 12, ch. x. vol. ii. p. 193; but this is contradicted by the Roman de Lancelot, vol. iii, f. cxliv^b, 4to, 1513, where the two cities are clearly distinguished from each other. Ritson supposes it may have been Caer-Went in Monmouthshire, and afterwards confounded with Caer-Wynt or Winchester; Life of Arthur, p. 82. But popular tradition here seems the best guide, which assigned the site of Camalot to the ruins of a castle on a hill, near the church of South Cadbury, in Somersetshire. See Leland's Itin. ii. 75, and Collectan. v. 28. In the Roman de Tristan we read, "Le roy Artus y sejournoit souvent, pour ce que la cité estoit aisée de toutes choses qu'il conuenoit à corps de homme aysier." vol. 1, f. xxxvii. fol. 1520. So also the author of the Roman du St. Graal, 2nd part, in speaking of another Camylot, the residence of the mother of Perceval, says, "Seigneurs, ne cuydez pas que ce soit de celluy Kamelot dont ces jogleurs vont chantant la chanson, ou le roy Artus tenoit si souvent sa court. Cestuy Kamelot, que fut à la vefue dame, est assyz au plus beau chef, et en la plus belle isle, et en la plus sauvaige de Galles, prez de la mer vers occident. Et l'autre Kamelot est a l'entrée du royaulme de Logres, qui est peuplé de gens, et est assiz au chef de la terre au roy Artus, pour ce que il tient à toutes les terres qui de celle part marchissoyent à la sienne." f. clxxxvii, 4to, 1516. See a passage likewise in the Roman de Lancelot, vol. i, f. lxxxvi, and Southey's note on Morte d'Arthur, ii. 487.

Ibid. l. 40. The revels at Christmas are more than once described with a zest, which would induce us to believe that the feasting and jollities of that season were kept up in the fourteenth century in Scotland in a manner not to be excelled by English pageantry. Besides the tourney, or amicable joust, we have carols, dancing, shouts of Noel, gifts decided by lot, interludes, songs, and other amusements. See ll. 472, 983, 1007, 1026, 1654. With regard to carols and Noel, Sandys's work on the subject may be consulted, 8vo, London, 1833. In the Roman de Lancelot, vol. i. f. xxxvi, it is stated, that Arthur was accustomed to hold a court and wear his crown five times in the year; namely, at Easter, Ascension-day, Pentecost, All Saints, and Noel. Of these the feast at Easter was more honoured, but that of Pentecost the most joyous. See some lines describing a court plenièrè at Christmas, in the Lai du Conseil, p. 85, of Lais Inedits, by Fr. Michel, 8vo, Paris, 1836. On the popular Christmas play, as at present preserved in various parts of Scotland and England, see Davies Gilbert's Christmas Carols, 8vo, 1823, pref. p. iv; Mac-taggart's Scottish Gallovidian Encyclopedia, (a work but little known, and very curious), 8vo, London, 1824, in v. Yule-boys; Gentleman's Magazine, 1830, parti. p. 505; Hone's Every-day Book, vol. ii. p. 18, 8vo, 1831; and Sandys's Carols, pp. 110, 174. This play has been separately printed, but made up, without judgement, from various sources, 8vo, Portsmouth, 1836.

P. 6, l. 81. *The comlokest to descrye,
Ther glent with yzen gray.*

The beauty of Queen Guenever is a constant theme with the old romancers, and appears to rest on historical tradition. In the Welsh version of the romance of Ywaine and Gawaine, (recently edited with so much taste by Lady Charlotte Guest as Part I. of the Mabinogion,) the expression "more lovely than Gwenhwyvar" occurs, p. 42, (see l. 945 of the present poem), and the editor remarks, that this was the highest compliment it was possible to pay, since Gwenhwyvar is celebrated in the Triads as one of the three fair ladies of Arthur's court, p. 102.

So also in the Latin Chronicle of Geoffrey, lib. ix. cap. 9, the queen is equally praised for her beauty and courteous manners, and this is repeated by Wace and his translators or imitators. But the most naïve and elaborate personal description of her appearance, whilst yet at the court of Leodagan her father, is given in the very rare Roman de Merlin, vol. i. f. cxxxvii, in these words:—"Ny oncques en Bretagne n' en nasquit point de plus belle pour lors. Son visaige estoit cler et luy-sant, et bien coulouré blanc et vermeil; si belle estoit que Nature avoit mis en elle toute son estudié, qu'il ne luy en failloit ne plus ne moins. Elle estoit haulte et droicte, et bien polie, le corps long, et gresle par les flans, les hanches basses, vestue d' abiz qui moult bien luy advenoient; les bras avoit gros et longs, les piedz plains et vouldiz, les mains grassetes, blanches comme neige. Si luy commençoient encores à croistre les mamelles dures, blanches, et rondes comme pommertes; ne fut trop grasse ne trop maigre." etc. See also another passage quoted by Southey in his Notes on Morte d'Arthur, vol. ii. p. 462. It need only be remarked in addition, that the "yzen gray," des yeux vaires, were considered in the times of romance as the undoubted characteristic of beauty. See examples (out of many) in the Erle of Tolous, ap. Ritson, Met. Rom. iii. 107. Launfal, ib. i. 205. Thomas of Ersyldoune, ap. Laing, Pop. Poetr. l. 89; and Syre Gawene and the Carle of Carelyle, in the present volume, p. 197, l. 365.

Ibid. l. 90. *And also another maner meued him eke
That he thur; nobelay had nomen, he wolde neuer etc.*

This is borrowed by the author immediately from the Roman de Perceval, fol. lxxviii.—"Keux, fait le Roy, ne vous hastez, car vous scavez long temps y a que quant court planière ay tenue, que jamais ne voullus menger ains que nouvelles ou merveilles ne fussent devers moy venues; et encores ne veuil coustume laisser ne abolir." So also in the Roman de Lancelot, vol. iii. f. lxxxii; and Roman de Merlin, vol. ii. f. lvi^b, which narrates the establishment of this custom of Arthur, and is probably the authority whence the other romances borrowed. Cf. Malory's Morte d'Arthur, ii. 203, 462. The same usage appears in the earlier German romance-writers, who, in truth, only translate the metrical French authorities. Consult Wigalois, p. 12, 12mo, Berlin, 1819; and the notes of the editor Benecke, p. 436.

P. 7. l. 110. And Agranayn a la dure mayn.

One of the brothers of Gawayne, by Belisent, half-sister of Arthur. I know not whence the author of the poem derived the epithet of à la dure main, which is never applied to him in the romances. His constant appellation there is l'Orgueilleux. His character is drawn in a few words in the Roman de Lancelot, ii. f. lxix.—“Il fut sans pitié et sans amour, ne il n'eut oncques bonne grace fors que de chevalerie, et de beauté, et la langue eut à delivré.” There is an amusing episode of his haughty behaviour in Merlin, ii. f. lxxxvi, at which his father, old king Lot, is so enraged, that he cries out to Gawayne to slay him. His death, however, was reserved for Sir Launcelot, after the latter had been surprised by him in queen Guenever's chamber. Morte d'Arthur, ii. 395.

This personage, who figures also in Sir Gawene and the Carle of Carelyle, and in The Turke and Gowin, occurs nowhere in the early French metrical and prose romances; and his name seems to have been substituted by the English or Scotch poets in the fourteenth century, for that of Bishop Brice or Dubricius. There was an Archbishop of Canterbury named Baldwin, who held the See from 1184 to 1191, from whom the name may have been taken.

Ibid. l. 113. Ywan, Yryn son.

Is the celebrated Ywain or Owain, sometimes surnamed Le Grand, son of Urien king of Moray, according to Geoffrey, or of Rheged, according to the Welsh authorities. His exploits were celebrated in French verse by Chrestien de Troyes, and thence translated into the German, Icelandic, Welsh, and English languages, for which consult Benecke's edition of Iwein der Riter mit dem Lewen, 8vo, Berlin, 1827; Von der Hagen's Grundriss zur Geschichte der Deutschen Poesie, 8vo, Berlin, 1812, p. 118; Ritson's Metrical Romances, vol. i. and Notes, vol. iii. 8vo, 1802; and Lady C. Guest's Mabinogion, part i, 8vo, 1838. He must not be confounded (as Ritson has done) with Ywain l'Avoultre, a base son of Urien by his seneschal's wife, who was killed by Gawayne without knowing him, Roman de Lancelot, iii. f. cxvii. There are also others of this name mentioned in the Roman de Merlin, i. f. ccviii^b, and in the Roman d'Erec et d'Enide. Cf. Arthour and Merlin, p. 306, 4to, 1838. The name of this hero of the Round Table, somewhat disguised, again occurs in l. 551 of the present poem; in the Awntyrs of Arthure, st. li. l. 4; and Golagros and Gawane, l. 662.

P. 22, l. 551. *Aywan, and Errik, and other ful mony,
Sir Doddinaual de [le] Sauvage, the duk of Clarence,
Launcelot, and Lyonel, and Lucan the gode,
Sir Boos, and Sir Byduer, big men bothe,
And mony other menskful, with Mador de la Port.*

Of Aywan or Ywain I have already spoken. The second on the list is Erec, son of king Lac, of whom the romance of Erec et d'Enide, by Chrestien de Troyes, exists in MS. Bibl. du Roi, No. 7498^t. The third is Dodinel le Sauvage, son of Belinans, king of Estrangegorre, by a daughter of king Matheu "de l'isle perdu." "Cestuy Dodinel," says the Roman de Merlin, "fut surnommé Sauvage, pource qu'il ne bougeoit des forestz et des bois, à chasser bestes sauvages," i. f. cxlviii. He is delivered by Gawayne out of prison in the Roman de Perceval, f. cxcii^b. The fourth, here named by his title of Duke of Clarence, was Galachin, son of Neutres, king of Garlot, by a sister of Arthur, and cousin of Dodinal. The duchy was given to him by Arthur, after his marriage with Guenever. The author of Merlin says of him, "Cest enfant fut le meilleur chevalier de deux centz cinquante chevaliers qui furent de la Table Ronde," i. f. cxl^b. His exploits in the Val sans retour are narrated in the Roman de Lancelot, i. f. cxc^b. The fifth on the list is the redoubtable son of king Ban of Benoit, whose amours with queen Guenever have made him more conspicuous even than his valor. The readers of his romance, or of Malory's Morte d'Arthur, need not be reminded that he became the destroyer, mediately or immediately, of Gawayne and his brothers. Lyonel de Gauves or Gannes, son of king Boort, was the cousin of Lancelot, and received the kingdom of Gaul from his hand. In the Roman de Lancelot, i. f. lxxxvi, it is said of him, "Et le varlet avoit à nom Lyonnell pource que une grande merveille advint à son naistre. Car sy tost comme il yssit du ventre Helayne, sa mere, l'en trouva au meillieu de son pis une tasche vermeille en forme de lyon, et avoit l'enfant embrassé parmy le col, ainsi comme pour l'estrangler." He is stated to have been killed in a battle against the sons of Mordred, and buried at Winchester. Sir Lucan was Arthur's butler, and died with the king in the fatal engagement with Mordred. Sir Boort or Bors de Gauves or Gannes, was brother of Lyonel, and inherited the territories of king Claudas. Sir

Beduer, usually styled the Constable, from his filling that office in Arthur's court, is characterized in the romance of Erec and Enide as one "Qui molt sot d'eschas et tables." His attendance on Arthur in his last moments, with the adventure of the sword Escalibor, forms an interesting chapter in the Morte d'Arthur, ii. 440. The last knight in the list, Mador de la Port, is introduced into the romance of Lancelot and the Morte d'Arthur, as the accuser of queen Guenever, on behalf of his cousin Sir Patryse, who had been poisoned by some apples at a banquet instead of Gawayne, for whom the fruit had been treacherously prepared. See Roman de Lancelot, iii. f. clix^b; Morte d'Arthur, ii. 321.

P. 23, l. 567. Askez erly his armez, and alle were thay brozt, etc.

This entire stanza and the following one are valuable for the minute description they contain of the mode of completely arming a knight at the close of the fourteenth century. The order was as follows:—A carpet was first brought, on which the various pieces of gilt armour were laid. The knight then was clad in a doublet of expensive Tarsic silk, (which was, doubtless, padded, to protect the body,) and next a skilfully made hood (capados), closed above, and bound within with some soft material (blawner). The steel shoes were then placed on his feet, and his legs covered to the knee with steel greaves, to which were affixed knee-pieces (poleyns) well-polished, and fastened with knots of gold. After this, fair cuisses were affixed to his brawny thighs, and tied beneath with thongs, and afterwards the byrny or haubergeon of mail, consisting of steel rings sewed on a fair stuff. Well-burnished braces then are placed on his arms, with good elbow-pieces (cowters), and gloves of plate. Above all he wore his coat-armor, or jupon; his gold spurs were fixed; and his sword attached about him by a silken girdle. Thus accoutred he hears mass, and afterwards, before mounting his horse, puts on his helmet, or bacinet, which was strongly stapled, and lined within; it sat high on his head, and was hasped behind; with a light urisoun over the aventaile, or part protecting the face, embroidered with gems on broad silken borders, with birds and truelove-knots interspersed so thick, as if it had been the labor of many ladies for seven years. Around the helmet was a circle of diamonds. The shield and spear complete the knight's equipment. Compare with this the passage in p. 75, and plate 14 of Skelton's Illustrations of Antient Armour, 4to, 1830.

Ibid. l. 572. A crafty capados, closed aloft.

I have met with no other instance of this term except in the present poem, but its derivation is clear, from the French cap-à-dos, and, doubtless, means a hood or close cap, descending low in the neck. Compare ll. 186 and 1930.

Ibid. l. 574. Thenne set thay the sabotounz, etc.

These were steel shoes or clogs to protect the feet, from the French sabot, Spanish sapato, and were at an earlier period termed sollerets. They are mentioned in a poem quoted in Sir Walter Scott's Notes to Sir Tristrem, p. 374, ed. 1833.

And some also dempte most sureste
To arme them for battel of areste,
And dyd on first, after their desires,
Sabatons, greves, cusses with voyders.

The poem is cited as "Clariodes, MS.", but as these lines do not occur in the romance of Clariodus, published by the Maitland Club, it would be very desirable to know where Sir Walter's authority is preserved. The term again occurs in a curious MS. in the Lansdowne collection, No. 285, written for Sir John Paston, in the reign of Edward IV, and subsequently the property of Sir Thomas Wriothesley, the elder, Garter. "First ye muste set on sabatynes, and tye them vpon the shoo, w^t smalle poyntes that wille [not] breke; and than griffus, and than quysshews, and than the breche of maile, and than towlettes; than the breste; than the vambrace; than the verebrace, than the gloovis," etc., fol. 9. See Archæologia, vol. xvii. p. 295, where the whole passage is copied, but not very accurately; and vol. xx. p. 496.

This term for genouillieres or knee-pieces of plate, is as old as the reign of Edward the First, in whose household-book it is found. See Du Cange, v. Polena, and Dissert. on Joinville, p. 184, fol. 1668. The word is preserved in the Wallace, viii. 1203, and Rauf Coilyear, ap. Laing, sign. B. iv.; and Jamieson is clearly mistaken in his explanation of pullaine greis, which mean greaves furnished with knee-pieces. See also MS. Harl. 6149, fol. 46.

Ibid. l. 583. With gode cowters and gay.

From the French coudière, la partie qui couvre la coude. In the inedited romance of Morte Arthure is a curious passage, which as it refers to a combat between Sir Gawayne and Sir Priamus, I may be excused quoting here.

And gyrdes at Syr Gawayne, as he by glentis,
 And awkwarde egerly sore he hym smythes ;
 An alet enamelde he ochis in sondire,
 Bristes the rerebrace with the bronde ryche,
 Kerues of at the coutere with the clene egge,
 Ane[n]tis the awawmbrace, vrayllede w^t siluer,
 Thorowe a double vesture of veluett ryche ;
 W^t the venemous swerde a vayne has he towchede,
 That voydes so violently, that alle his witte changede ;
 The vesere, the auentaile, his vestures ryche,
 With the valyant blode was verrede alle ouer.

MS. Linc., A. 1, 17, f. 80^b.

Ibid. l. 592. So harnayst as he wat, he herknez his masse.

Thus in the Roman du Saint Graal, f. clxi^b, 4to, 1516, it is said of Gawayne, "Ne jamais Gauvain ne partoît d'ung logis sans ouyr messe, s'il pouoit, ny oncques ne trouva damoiselle qu'il ne secourust." See also Ritson's Metr. Rom., iii. 241.

P. 24, l. 597. Bi that wat, Gryngolet grayth, etc.

The name of this celebrated horse furnishes an additional proof of the acquaintance possessed by the author of the early French romances. In the Roman de Merlin, pt. ii. f. lxxii^b—lxxiv, is the account of his acquisition by Gawayne from the Saxon king Clarion, who rode "le Gringalet, ung cheval qui ainsi avoyt à non, pour la grant bonté de quoy il estoit plain ; car le compte dit, que pour dix lieues courir il n'en faisoit que le cerf, à tout ung chevalier armé de toutes pièces, ne si ne le failloit point picquer ne petit ne grant, ne jamais poil ne luy sua." We meet with the same steed in the Conte of Le Chevalier à l'Espée,

Les armes reçut un vaslet,
 Uns autres prist lou Gringalet.

Meon's Fabliaux, i, 134.

Again, in the metrical Roman de Perceval,

Trestoz fors le Gringalet ;
 Plorant s'en revont li valet.

MS. Coll. Arm. f. 199.

which in the prose text (4to, 1530, f. xxxiii^b) is thus rendered, "et remenassent ses chevaulx, fors ung bien petit palefroy," evidently shewing that the later writer did not understand his original. In the old German version of Wolfram von Eschenbach, who appears to have followed Guiot, a Provençal author, rather than Chrestien de Troyes, we find the lines,

Dò was ouch Gringuljetan gegurt, daz in mangel an gestlichen furt gein strite was zer tjoste brâht, des wart och dâ hin zim gedâht.

Parzival, ed. Lachmann, 8vo, 1833, p. 167.

In The Awntyrs of Arthure, Gawayne's steed is simply named Grisselle, st. xlii. l. 13.

Ibid. l. 607. *Hit wat; hyze on his hede, hasped bihynde,
Wyth a lyzth vrisoun over the aventayle,
Enbrawdenn and bounden, etc.*

Much time has been spent, but without success, in endeavouring to find other instances of the term urison, which would seem to have been the same as the cointisse, or "kerchief of plesaunce," such as it appears on the effigy of Aymer de Valence, who died in 1323. See Stothard's Monum. Effigies, fol. 1817, and Sir S. Meyrick's Critical Inquiry, ii. 57. But in the former work, p. 12, in describing the bacinet, Stothard writes, "The camail, and what was called by the French a hourson, to which may be added a strap, was to attach the whole by means of a buckle, to the haubergeon or plates." Whence did Stothard derive this term? I answer, in all probability from MS. Harl. 6149, in which at fol. 46, are regulations "How a knyght suld be armyt in tournay;" and among them occurs, "Item, bacynet à tout le hourson, and ane escussone of balayne apone the nek, couerit w^t ledder, etc. And apone ye bacynet a coife of mail, and a faire offroy befor on ye front, quha will." These regulations are printed at length in the Archæologia, vol. xx. p. 510, and in the Critical Inquiry, vol. i. p. 155, but, I regret to add, very incorrectly; and the explanation of the terms used is very wide of the truth, as may appear by comparing the original French text, printed in Du Cange's seventh Dissertation on Joinville, p. 184. It is a curious circumstance, which must have escaped the notice of the author of the Inquiry, that the same regulations were previously printed more accurately by Leyden in his rambling preface to the Complaynte of Scotland, 4to, Edinb., 1802, p. 57, and there given as an extract from an heraldic MS., written and therefore conjectured to have been composed by Sir David Lyndsay, in 1586; and on such doubtful grounds large excerpts were made, and an argument drawn to prove the author of the Complaynte and the writer of the heraldic MS.

to have been one and the same! But the fact is, that the contents of this Heraldic MS. (now in the Advocates Library, marked W. 4. 13.) were literally transcribed by Lyndsay from the Harleian MS. 6149, which latter volume, as appears by several entries in it, was translated out of French into Scotch at the command "of anne wirschipfulle man, Weljim Cumyn of Inverellochquy, alias Marchemond Herald, be his obedient sone in the Office of Armes, Kintyre purseuant," in the year 1494. In Lyndsay's time the Harleian MS. was no doubt preserved in the Scotch Office of Arms, which easily accounts for its transcription, and at once destroys all the superstructure raised by Leyden on its contents. In the French text, the word which occasioned this note is written houson; in Leyden it is printed howsonne, and in Meyrick housson, and interpreted housing. I am, however, inclined to believe that hourson, the reading of the Harleian MS., is correct, as established by the line in the romance cited above.

This is not the padded wreath worn from the time of Richard II. to Henry IV. on the bacinet, but the more splendid band of goldsmiths' work, enriched with jewels. It is called "bourdoure" in the Avntyr of Arthure, st. xxx. l. 4, and said to be "alle of brynte golde." See numerous examples in Stothard's excellent work; and also consult Du Cange, v. Bacinetum; Roquefort's Glossaire, Suppl. v. Helme; Meyrick's Inquiry, Gloss., v. Helmus; and Planché's Hist. of Costume, p. 160.

Sloane, 3825. At f. 221^b, is the Pentagonal Figure of Solomon, comprising a pentangle within a circle; in the outer triangles is inscribed the name TETRAGRAMMATON, and names of Spirits in the inner divisions. It is directed to be made in ☉ or ☽, and worn upon the breast, with the seal of the Spirit on one side of it, etc.

P. 25. l. 636. *For thy the pentangel nwe
He ber in schelde and cote.*

This appropriation of arms to Sir Gawayne is purely imaginary on the part of the author, and borne out by no romance authority. In the Devise des Armes des Chevaliers de la Table Ronde, prefixed to the Roman de Gyron la Courtois, fol., his arms are thus blasoned, "Gawvain d'Orcanie portoit de purpre à ung aygle d'or à deux testes, membrées d'azur;" and this is copied by all the writers on the (pretended) armorial bearings of the Round Table, down to Richard Robinson, who in that very scarce book, "The Auncient Order, etc., of Prince Arthure," 4to, Lond., 1583, tells us in his doggerel lines,

In purple shield an Aegle spled
All golde Sir Gawayne gaue;
One of the knights most conquerous,
Hee merits fame to haue.

Amongst them which the Table Rounde
Enobled with Renowne
By deeds of Arms in Contreyes cause,
To bring her foes a-downe.

It is certain, however, that the earlier romancers do not uniformly countenance these arms. In the Roman du St. Graal, indeed, pt. ii. ff. cxxxvi^b, clxii, Gawayne's shield is said to be de sinople, à ung aigle d'or, which device was probably bestowed on him from winning the shield of Judas Maccabeus (ibid. f. cxxx.), bearing the same insignia; but in the Roman de Merlin, vol. i. f. clxiv, Gawayne's banner is described "de cendal d'Inde, à ung lyon d'argent," and vol. ii. f. lxxxiii^b, his shield, "au lion de sinople, rampant." So also in the Roman de Lancelot, i. f. xcvi^b, his shield is blasoned, "le champ de l'escu estoit d'or, et ung lyon de gueules." Again in the German romance of Wigalois, l. 5618, his arms are represented to be "ein wizzer hirz uf einem berge guldin," and on an ivory carving of the thirteenth century, representing Sir Gawayne reposing on the enchanted bed, (see Roman de Perceval, f. xl.) we find on his shield a lion's jamb. Consult Ferrario, Storia ed Analisi degli antichi romanzi di Cavalleria, vol. ii. p. 101, 8vo, 1828. By way of adding to this variety, the author of the Avntyr of Arthure, st. xl. tells us his arms were "griffones of golde, engrelede fulle gaye," with whom agrees the author of the metrical Morte Arthure in the Lincoln MS., fol. 93^b.

Ibid. l. 648. *At this cause the knyzt comlyche hade
In the more half of his schelde hir ymage depaynted.*

The author has introduced the Virgin on Gawayne's shield in imitation of Pridwen, the famous shield of Arthur, on which her image was similarly depicted. The passage in Geoffrey of Monmouth, lib. ix. c. 3, appears thus in the early English version of Layamon.

He heng an his sweore

See my edition of this valuable old poet, now in the press, vol. ii. p. 464, and Notes on the passage. A curious tradition or legend on the subject, evidently composed by the Monks at Glastonbury, and intitled "Quedam narracio de nobili rege Arthuro, in sacramento altaris non plene credente, qualiter confirmatus fuit in fide, factus vere credens, et quare mutavit arma sua," is preserved in the Bodleian Library, and together with several other Latin legends relating to the heroes of the Round Table, may hereafter be published by me, accompanied by translations and notes.

In the Roman de Merlin, ff. xcviij, cxvii^b, Logres is merely the name of London, "la maitresse cité" of Arthur's kingdom, but in the present instance it means England in general. Supposing Gawayne to set out on his expedition from Camelot in Somersetshire, he must have proceeded (in case he did not cross the Severn) through Gloucestershire and adjoining counties into Montgomeryshire, and thence by a very circuitous route to Holyhead, adjoining the isle of Anglesea, from which he passes into the long narrow peninsula of Wirral in Cheshire, the uninhabited and waste state of which in the sixteenth century is borne out by historical facts. (See Ormerod's Cheshire, vol. ii. p. 187.) The knight thence pursues his way over hill and moor, until he arrives at an immense forest, the locality of which would lead us to presume it to be Inglewood forest in Cumberland, which is elsewhere celebrated in romance. The object of his search, "the grene chapel," is stated to be but two miles distant from a castle in this forest, in which Gawayne takes up his abode. Although in cases of this sort the imagination of the romance-writer generally is the sole guide of his pen, yet I cannot help thinking some allusion may be made to the "Chapel of the Grune," which in the older maps of Cumberland is marked as existing on the point of land on the western coast running into the æstuary of the Wampool, not far from Skinburness, which forms part of Allerdale ward, below Derwent, but its history I have in vain searched for in various topographical works. Close to this was Woltsty or Vulstey castle, said to have been built by the Abbots of Holm Cultram, to secure their treasures; and here also are said to have been preserved the magic books of the wizard Michael Scott. The gorger or wimple is stated first to have appeared in Edward the First's reign, and an example is found on the monument of Aveline, countess of Lancaster, who died in 1269. The fashion continued partially during the fourteenth century, for Chaucer's Wife of Bath is so dressed, and the usage may have lasted longer in Scotland than in England. It makes its appearance again in the reign of Henry the Sixth, as appears by the monument of Elizabeth, wife of John de la Pole, duke of Suffolk. It may be observed, however, that from the poem the usage of the gorger would seem to have been confined to the elderly ladies.

P. 43, l. 1126. This and the succeeding stanza are quoted by Mr. Guest in his "History of English Rhythms," vol. ii. p. 166, accompanied by a translation, which is often faulty, as will be occasionally pointed out in the Glossary. The minute particulars given here and elsewhere of "wode-crafte," may seem to have been suggested by the similar passage in the romance of Sir Tristrem; but whether this be so or not, the present poem has greatly the superiority, both in the extent of the details and the more graphic character given to them.

The plan of hunting the deer here described may be explained as follows. On assembling at the kennel, the hounds were called out and coupled, and the hunters blew on their bugles three short moots or notes, which was responded to by the baying of the dogs. The veuters, or men who judged of the game by the fewte or scent, then proceeded to the stations (trysteres) marked out, and the dogs were cast off. The deer, roused from the dale by the cry, seek refuge in the heights (the hyze), but are there driven back by the parties (stablye) appointed, who allow the male deer and bucks to pass, but drive back the hinds and does with shouts; and as they fly, followed by the dogs, they are pierced with arrows, or should they escape the bowmen, are pulled down and killed by the greyhounds at the stations below. Compare the passages in the Awntyrs of Arthure, st. iv. v.; Romance of Clariodus, p. 246; and Wyntoun, vi. 16, 15, vii. 1, 46.

P. 50, l. 1327. And didden hem derely vndo, as the dede askez.

The process here described may be compared with that in Sir Tristrem, p. 158, and in Dame Juliana Berner's Book of St. Albans, sign. e. i. edit. 1496. See also La Venerie de Jaques de Fouilloux, 4to, Paris, 1585, cap. 44; and A Jewell for Gentry, [by T. S.] 4to, Lond., 1614, sign. F. 2. The description runs thus, as far as the obscurity of the technical terms used enables me to interpret it. After taking the assay, or depth of the fat, they slit the slot (the hollow above the breast-bone, or, according to others, the pit of the stomach), and take out the erber (the conduit leading to the stomach), cut it with a sharp knife, and tie up the severed parts; then rip the four limbs, and rend off the hide. They next open the belly, and take out the bowels, cutting away lustily, and bear away the knot; then grasping the gargulun, they quickly divide the weasand or gullet from the wind-hole, and throw out the small guts. Afterwards they proceed to carve out the shoulders, by a small aperture, so as to keep the sides whole, and divide the breast in halves. Then beginning again at the gargulun, the deer is slit up to the fork; the avancers are voided out, and the fillets cut away by the ribs, and so by the ridge-bone even to the haunch, all of which form the noumbles, and are taken away together. By the fork of the thighs they lance the flaps behind, and hew it in two parts by the back-bone. After this the head and neck are cut off, and next the sides severed from the chine; the raven's bone or fee is cast on a bush, and the sides pierced through and hung upon the houghs of the haunches(?), as the fee of those who were entitled to them. Lastly, they feed their hounds on the hide, with the liver, lights, and skin of the paunch, mingled with bread dipt in blood, and blow prys, consisting of "two longe notes and the rechate." The latter part of this ceremony, then considered so important, is amply described in the Mayster of the Game, a treatise compiled for king Henry the Fifth, when prince; but the details are passed over as belonging "moor to wodemannys craft than to hunters." See MS. Cott.

The meaning of this line is obscure, but it seems to be, that the boar from its age had long since quitted the sounder or herd; according to the Book of St. Alban's,

Now to speke of the boore, the fyrste year he is
A pygge of the sounder callyd, as haue I blys;
The seconde yere an hogge, and soo shall he be,
And an hoggestere, whan he is of yeres thre;

And so also in the treatise ascribed to Twety, written originally in French, in the time of Edward the Second. P. 63, l. 1699. Summe fel in the fute, ther the fox bade, etc.

That the hunting of the fox was an accustomed sport as early as the beginning of the thirteenth century we have the authority of Lazamon, who in his translation of the Brut inserts a passage not in his original, in which king Arthur compares the position of Cheldric, in the forest of Caledon, to that of bold Reynard after a chace, when he is fain to take to his hole, and is unearthed by his pursuers. See vol. ii. p. 451. A drawing on this subject executed soon after the year 1300, is copied by Strutt in his Sports and Pastimes, from MS. Reg. 2 B. vii. In the Mayster of the Game it is said, "The huntynge for the foxe is faire for the good erie of the houndis that folowene hym so nye, and with so good a wille; alway thei senten of hym, for he fleth by thik spoies, and also for he stinketh euermore, and with gret payne he wil leeu a couert whan he is therinne," etc., f. 42^b. Yet notwithstanding this commendation, fox-hunting seems to have been but in little repute in the fifteenth century, and is almost wholly passed over in the Book of St. Alban's. The description of the fox-chase given in stanzas xxiii, xxiv, and xxxi, forms one of the most spirited parts of the poem, and are certainly the earliest extant on the subject among Scottish writers.

The process of arming is not so minutely described here as in p. 23, but consists merely in putting on the ordinary apparel, and then the armour, namely, a hauberk (paunce), a pair of plates for the back and breast, and a byrny or haburgeon of steel rings, which would almost seem superfluous. Over all these was cast the surcoat of velvet, embroidered with the knight's conisance in precious stones, and furred.

In koyntyse of cleryge bi craftes wel lerned;
The maystres of Merlyn, etc.*

The fame of this lady is known to all readers of romance, and more particularly of the Romance of Merlin, in which a minute description of her personal appearance and accomplishments is given. See Southey's Notes on Morte d'Arthure, ii. 468. It is acknowledged on all sides that she received her instruction in the art of magic from the "conable klerk" Merlin, and from her proficiency was called "Morgain la fée," which our author has rendered "Morgne the goddess." Yet he seems by calling her "the maystres of Merlyn," and speaking of her amours with that sage personage, to have unwittingly confounded her with her rival in the science of necromancy, Vivienne, the Lady of the Lake. Merlin's love for the latter, and her deception of him by means of the art he had taught her, are related in various places; but there is no authority, as far as my reading extends, for the assertion in the poem, beyond that of the writer himself. The cause of Morgain's hate to queen Guenever, alluded to in the text, l. 2460, was occasioned by an intrigue between the former and a knight named Guyomars, which was discovered and revealed by the queen. Roman de Merlin, i. f. clxxx^b; Roman de Lancelot, i. f. cxevi; Le Grand's Fabliaux, i. 152, ed. 1829. In the romance of "Ywaine and Gawin," printed in Ritson, a lady says she has a precious ointment, given to her by "Morgan the Wise." This undoubtedly refers to the enchantress, and Ritson in his Notes, vol. iii. p. 239, interprets it erroneously. The Prophecies of Merlin attribute to the Lady of the Lake a deeper knowledge of magic than Morgain, and a curious story is related of a trial of skill between Morgain, the Lady of Avalon, Sibille, the enchantress, and the queen of North Wales. If, says the compiler, the Lady of the Lake had been there, "toute la subtilité du monde y seroit." Morgain conjures up a legion of devils to carry away the Lady of Avalon, but they are repulsed, and Morgain herself comes in person, reading her magical book as she advances. Her opponent, however, is prepared for her, and having on a ring, the power of which is such as to obtain instantly whatever the possessor demands, she comes forward to Morgain, and asks for all her clothes, which of course immediately leave the wearer, and Merlin's pupil, to her extreme surprise, finds herself "al so naked as she was borne" in the midst of her attendants! The Lady of Avalon laughs at her confusion, but in pity takes off her surcoat, and gives it to the vanquished and angry enchantress.—“Ha ! dame, fait Morgain, vous m'avez honnye, car l'on cuidoit que je fusse de jeune aage, et ilz ont veu ma chair nue et ridée, et mes mamelles pendans, et aussi la peau de mon ventre, dont la nouvelle sera comptée en maint lieu.’ ‘Morgain,’ fait la Dame d’Avallon, ‘je sçay certainement que par maintes fois avez esté en vostre lict toute nue avec maint beau chevalier.’ ‘En nom Dieu,’ fait Morgain, ‘se je y ay esté, aussi me suys-je baignée, et oings tous mes membres, dont les chevaliers les troverent toutes fresches et dures,’” fol. cxxxi^b. The author of the poem had therefore good authority for his description of the “auncian” lady. See l. 961.

The Awntyrs of Arthure at the Terne Wathelyne.

TWO Manuscripts of this romance exist. Of these one is at present in the Bodleian Library, which previously belonged to Baynes, Ritson and Douce, and from a transcript of this MS. the poem was first printed (“surroptitiously,” says Ritson,) by Pinkerton, in his “Scotish Poems,” vol. iii. p. 197, 12mo, 1792, under the title of “SIR GAWAN AND SIR GALARON OF GALLOWAY.” He divided it into two parts, and prefixed an argument to each, but his text is extremely incorrect, and, as he was confessedly ignorant of the language, his Glossary exhibits many errors. From this edition, bad as it is, the first twenty-six stanzas were transferred to Sibbald’s “Chronicle of Scotish Poetry,” 8vo, 1802, vol. i. p. xvii. Another transcript of this MS., made about the middle of the last century, was in the library of Heber (Sale Cat. No. 1121, where it is stated to have been copied “from a MS. penes Nickols,”) and was purchased subsequently by Sir Thomas Phillipps, Bart. The second copy of the poem is preserved in the library of Lincoln Cathedral, marked A. 1. 17, but is, unfortunately, not quite perfect. From this MS. the romance was again printed by Laing, in his "Select Remains of the Ancient Popular Poetry of Scotland," 4to, 1822, and the deficiencies supplied from Mr. Douce's manuscript. The age of the latter MS. is assigned by Pinkerton and Laing to the reign of Henry the Sixth, but I do not think it can claim a higher antiquity than the period of his successor, or about the years 1460-1480. The Lincoln copy is undoubtedly earlier, being written, with many other pieces in the same volume, between the years 1430-1440.¹ It has therefore been judged advisable, in printing this curious poem for the third time, to take the Lincoln MS. for the ground-work of the text, and where defective, inserting the lines from the later copy, the variations of which throughout are very carefully noted. There are many clerical errors in both manuscripts, which were no doubt written in England, and therefore do not present a genuine Scottish text, yet enough remains to prove the romance to be of Northern original. The readings of the Douce MS. are sometimes preferable, but as it is a dangerous practice to attempt to unite copies written at different periods and in different parts of the kingdom, the variations of the later copy have been kept quite distinct. Both the MSS. having been placed by the liberality of the owners, the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln and the late Francis Douce, Esq., for a considerable period in the hands of the editor, an opportunity was thereby afforded of transcribing and collating them more minutely than had previously been possible, and it is believed that the present edition may on that account lay claim to greater accuracy than its predecessors.

The authorship of this poem has been generally ascribed to Clerk of Tranent, who is believed, with every appearance of probability, to have lived in the early part of the fifteenth century. The authority on which this supposition rests is a passage in the poem of Dunbar, intitled "Lament for the deth of the Makkaris," written about the year 1507, in which he says,

*Clerk of Tranent eik he hes tane,
That maid the awnteris of Gawane.*²

The Maitland MS. reads The clerk, which has occasioned Macpherson³, and, after him, Sibbald and Heber, to conjecture, that Hucheon or Hugh may have been his christian name, and consequently that the Huchowne of Wyntoun and the Clerk of Dunbar were the same individual. But this conjecture has no probability in it, and is satisfactorily refuted by the internal evidence of the poem itself. From the similarity of style, the peculiar construction of the stanza, and the subject, it is almost certain, that the writer of the Awntyrs of Arthure must also have been the author¹ of Golagros and Gawane, and it will hence appear how inconsiderately the composition of these poems has been assigned by Sir Walter Scott², Ellis³, Sibbald⁴, and Tytler⁵ to the thirteenth century! The language alone, had it been studied, would prove the error of such an hypothesis, which is more completely demonstrated by the costume of these pieces, and by the structure of the wheel attached to each stanza. Another feature of these poems consists in the repetition of a leading thought or expression, which served to knit the lines together and assist the memory, but this is not confined to poems of the fifteenth century, nor indeed to Scottish poetry; for the usage occurs in Minot's poems, composed in the middle of the fourteenth century, and was borrowed from the middle-age Latin writers, among whom such verses were called serpentine.

The sources from which the Scottish writers derived their romance poems has been too hastily referred by Sir Walter Scott to the floating British traditions of Arthur's cycle⁶; an opinion repeated by Leyden⁷, Laing⁸, and Tytler⁹. This assertion I hold to be true to a very limited extent. Allowing even Sir Tristrem to be the work of a native of Scotland, (which I do not,) nothing is more certain than its derivation from an Anglo-Norman text; and the same fact is indisputable in the instances of the romances of Sir Gawayne and the Grene Knyzt, and Golagros and Gawane. In regard to the poem which these remarks more particularly apply to, the author refers to "the buke," but whether this is, as often, a mere form of words, I have met with no evidence to prove. It is, however, not to be doubted, that the groundwork of the first portion of the poem is taken from a very popular religious legend among the Latin writers of the middle-age, which is found in various forms, but with the same general outline,—the appearance of a female in torments, who has been punished for her want of chastity, pride, and vanity, and whose salvation is procured by a certain number of masses said for her soul. In my edition of the old English versions of the Gesta Romanorum, printed for the Roxburghe Club, 4to, 1838, will be found several notices on the subject, Notes, p. 528. There is an inedited English poem of the fifteenth century, called "The Trental of St. Gregory," MS. Cott.

⁸ Pop. Poetr. Scoll., pref. to The Awntyrs.

⁹ Hist. Scoll. ii. 359.

Calig. A. II. f. 84^b, founded on the same story, in which Pope Gregory plays the part that queen Guenever does in the Scottish romance. It may be worth while to quote a few lines to shew the similarity of the tales.

The pope as he at hys masse stode
 Vpon hys modur he hadde throwȝt goode,
 Praying to god w^t conciens clere,
 The sothe to knowe as hit were ;
 And sodenly yn myddes hys masse
 Ther throwȝ to hym suche a derkenesse
 Th^t he lakkede ner the dayes lyȝt,
 For hit was derke as mydnyȝt.
 In th^t derkenes was myste among,
 Alle astonyed he stode, so hit stongke !
 Be syde he loked vnthur hys lere ;
 In th^t derknes a thyng threw hym nere,
 A wonthurfulle grysely creature,
 Aftur a fend fyred, w^t alle here feture ;
 Alle ragged & rente, both elenge & euelle,
 As orrybulle to beholde as any deuelle ;
 Mowthe, face, eres, and yes
 Brenned alle fulle of brennyng lyes.
 He was so agast of th^t grysyly goste
 That yn a sownyng he was almoste.

He accosts the spirit, who answers him thus :

I am thy modur th^t the beere,
 Th^t for vnschryuen dedes so derne
 In byttyr paynes thus Y brenne.

He inquires the cause, and is told it is the consequence of her living in lusts and refusing to confess.

The pope lette teres adown renne,
 And to hys modyr he sayde then,
 Telle me now, modur, for loue of Mary, flour,
 If any thyng may the help or sokour,
 Bedes or masse thy penaunce to bye,
 Or ony fastyng thy sorowe to aleye ?

She requires a trental of masses, and then departs.

It need scarcely be remarked how immeasurably the Scottish poet has the advantage over the English writer.

Of the second part of the romance I have not been so fortunate as to find the prototype, but in the Morte d'Arthur of Malory, professedly compiled from the French, Syr Galleron of Galway is introduced as a knight of the Table Round, "the whiche was a noble knyghte, and had done many dedes of armes, and he was a large knyght of flesshe and boone," vol. ii. p. 197. Of his "many dedes of armes" scarcely any information is given, but we find him again included among the knights who watch together for the purpose of surprising Lancelot du Lac in queen Guenever's chamber. "And these were their names: Syr Colgreuaunce, Syr Mador de la Porte, Syre Gyngalyne, Syr Melyot de Logrys, Syre Petypase of Wynchelse, Syr Galleron of Galway, Syr Melyon of the Montayne, Sir Astamore, Syre Gromore Somor joure [read Grummors sone], Syr Curselayne, Syr Florence, Syr Louel. So these twelue knyghtes were with Sir Mordred and Sir Agrauayne, and al they were of Scotland, outhur of Syr Gawayn's kynne, outhur well willers to his bretheren."—Morte d'Arthur, vol. ii. p. 392.

P. 95, st. i. l. 2. By the Terne Wahethelyne.

This is still the name of a small tarn or lake, which covers about an hundred acres of land in the forest of Inglewood, near Hesketh in Cumberland. Towards the north-east end were the remains, in 1794, of an ancient castle, called popularly Castle Hewin. Hutchinson's Cumberland, i. 491. The spot is again alluded to in the romance-tale or ballad on the Marriage of Sir Gawayne, printed by Percy, Reliques, iii. 351, ed. 1794, and reprinted in the Appendix to the present volume. Consult Ritson's King Arthur, p. 93.

Ibid. st. i. l. 3. Carelele.

Carlisle in Cumberland is here evidently intended, but in the French romances we always find Cardueil, which is represented to be "en la marche de Galles" in the Rom. de Perceval, f. lxxvi^b, where we may conclude that Caerleon on Usk, in Monmouthshire, may be meant. See Lady C. Guest's Note on the Mabinogion, pt. i. p. 87.

P. 96, st. iii. l. 4. That borne was in Burgoyne.

This must refer to the birth-place of Gawayne's steed, since neither himself nor the Queen were born in Burgundy. Perhaps, however, it is a poetical license, for the sake of the alliteration.

P. 99, st. viii. l. 5. Sir Cadore, Sir Caduke, Sir Costarde, Sir Kaye.

Cador was earl of Cornwall, and acts a conspicuous part in the Brut. He was slain with the flower of the knights of the Round Table in the battle against Mordred, and his son Constantine succeeded Arthur in the kingdom. Mr. Douce's MS. reads Sir Cleges, whose name occurs several times in the Morte d'Arthur, and of whom exists a romance printed by Weber, vol. i. p. 331. Sir Caduke is doubtless Sir Cradock (the Carados of French romance,) who is the hero of the amusing tale of The Boy and the Mantle, in Percy, vol. iii. p. 3. Sir Costarde is probably a false reading for Constantyne, Cador's son; and Sir Kaye is the well-known Senechal of Arthur.

P. 102, st. xii. l. 2. Than Beryke or Brangwayne.

Brangwayne is sufficiently well known as the accommodating attendant of La belle Iseult, (see Scott's Notes on Sir Tristrem, pp. 418, 450, and Michel's Tristan, ii. 163, 12mo, 1835); but of the other lady, Beryke, or Berelle (as Douce's MS. reads,) no mention has been found, either in French or English romancers.

P. 103, st. xiii. l. 11. Nowe moyse one this mirroure, etc.

P. 104, st. xvi. l. 7. My modir.

The name of queen Gayenour's or Guenever's mother is not here expressed, nor have I met with it elsewhere. According to romance authority she must have been the wife of Leodegan, king of Carmelide. The vices she accuses herself of are imaginary, and introduced from the old religious legend, invented for the purpose of shewing the efficacy of confession and mass.

P. 108, st. xxii. l. 2. The Frolo and the Farnaghe.

Arthur's combat with, and victory over Frolo, the tribune or governor of Gaul under the Romans, is related by Geoffrey, lib. ix. cap. 11, and amplified afterwards by Wace and Layamon. The same personage is introduced into the Roman de Merlin, p. ii. f. ix, and Roman de Lancelot, ii. f. lxiv^b. Who is meant by the Farnaghe, I am at a loss to discover, and from the reading of Douce's MS. one would suspect some error here. In the inedited Morte Arthure, Fortune says to the British monarch,

Fownde abbayes in Fraunce, the froyte; are thyne awene,
Fore Frolle, and for Feraunt, and for thir ferse knyghttis,
That thowe fremydly in Fraunce has faye be-leuede.

MS. Linc. f. 89.

This Sir Feraunt was slain by Sir Florent, in a battle between Sir Gawayne and the Lorainers and Lombards, ib. f. 82^b. Compare Malory's Morte d'Arthur, book v. cap. 11. It may be remarked that the reading of the Douce MS. in the latter part of the line is fully confirmed by the passage quoted above.

P. 109, st. xxiii. l. 1. A knyghte salle kenly, etc.

Few readers of romance will have to be reminded that the traitor Mordred, generally termed Arthur's nephew, but in reality his bastard son by the wife of king Loth, is here intended. According to Malory, book xxi. cap. 1, he was crowned at Canterbury. For a personal description of Mordred, see Roman de Lancelot, ii. f. lxix. His treason was first communicated to Arthur, after the final defeat of the Romans, in Tuscany.

Ibid. st. xxiii. l. 8. Be-syde Ramessaye, fulle ryghte at a rydyng; And at Dorsett salle dy doghetyeste of alle.

The scene of the fatal battle with Mordred is placed by Geoffrey of Monmouth and his followers near the river Camel in Cornwall, which by French writers and many of our modern historians is called Camlan. Lazamon, the translator of Wace in the reign of King John, adds from himself, that the precise spot was at Camelford. See my edition of that writer, vol. iii. p. 141. The author of a short metrical Brut, in the MS. Red Book of Bath, calls it Camelerton. It is therefore difficult to explain the statement in the passage above cited, which is manifestly erroneous, and opposed to the stanza immediately following, in which the writer says "upponne Cornewayle coste." Sir Thomas Malory, apparently without any authority, removes the action to "a doune besyde Salysbury," vol. ii p. 436.

*Ibid. st. xxiv. l. 7. that beris of sabille
A sawtire engrelede, of siluer fulle schene.*

This is also an invention of the poet, and not in accordance with the romance authorities, which state Mordred's arms to have been similar to his half-brothers, "de pourpre à un aigle à deux testes d'or, membrées de mesmes, à un chef d'argent." See La Devise, etc., des Chevaliers de la Table Ronde.

P. 110, st. xxv. l. 9. In the Lincoln MS. the scribe has negligently inserted in the place of this line the last five lines of st. xviii., but with some variations from his previous text, as follows:

To mene me w ^t meffes grete mede to the it were ;
Bot for hym þ ^t raghte was one rode, _____	} Whilles þ ^t jou arte here.
Gyffe fatte of thi gude _____
To þam' þat fayles the fude, _____

P. 111, st. xxvi. l. 12. To Rondolfe sett haulle.

Of Randulphs, or Randals Hall, I have been unable to fix the locality. It may be, as in other instances, an imaginary spot.

P. 113, st. xxx. l. 12. *And his cheuarone by-forne
Stode als ane vnycorne, etc.*

Cheuarone is here used for the chanfron or chanfrain, i. e. the piece of armour which protected the horse's head. Sir S. Meyrick states, Critical Inquiry, vol. ii. p. 143, that the invention of a spike in front of the chanfron is to be assigned to the end of Henry the Sixth's reign ; and Planche, in his Hist. of Costume, p. 205, says "chanfrons, with spikes projecting from them, were adopted about 1467." Were this true, the date of the poem before us would be brought lower than the period we are from other circumstances justified in considering it to belong to. In an inventory dated 1316, I find mention made of two "chanfrains dorez, et un de cuir," and in the Assise Hierosolymitaneæ, which Sir S. Meyrick considers to belong to the reign of Edward the Third, we have in cap. 95, the following passage, "Et le cheval doit estre couvert de couverture de fer (as in the present poem, st. xxx. l. 6,) et avoir une testiere de fer, et enmi la testiere une broche de fer, telle come celle de l'escu." See Crit. Inq. i. 124.

P. 115, st. xxxiii. l. 3. *Of Konyng, of Carryke, of Conynghame, of Kylie,
Of Lomonde, of Lenay, of Lowthyane hillis.*

For Konyng the Douce MS. reads Connok, which is right, as confirmed by st. liii, l. 3. The parishes of Old Cumnock and New Cumnock, in Ayrshire, were formerly comprehended in one, and constituted a barony, which in the fourteenth century belonged to the earls of March. See Chalmers's Caledonia, iii. 521. The same writer says it is difficult to decide when the Celtic districts of Carrick, Cunningham, and Kyle were formed into the present county of Ayrshire, and that in the time of Henry the Third Carrick was described as being in Galloway, a name applied loosely to the whole peninsula between the Solway and the Clyde, including Annandale and Ayrshire. By the ancient division of this county Carrick occupied the southern side of the Doon; Kyle, the space between the rivers Doon and Irvine; and Cunningham the whole territory on the north of the last-mentioned river. Ibid. iii. 249, 446. Lomonde is in Dumbartonshire, and for Lenay, or, as MS. Douce reads, Losex, we should probably read Lenaux, Lennox, an ancient district now partitioned between the counties of Stirling and Dumbarton.

P. 117, st. xxxvii. l. 7. By that, one Plutone land a palais was pizt.

Perhaps Plumpton Park or Land is alluded to, situate in the parish of Lazenby, Leath ward, Cumberland, about six miles from Penrith.

P. 118, st. xxxviii. l. 1. Krudely, the erles sone of Kent.

I can find no such person among the knights of Arthur's court.

P. 119, st. xl. l. 2. Griffones of golde.

See Note on the previous poem, l. 686.

P. 122, st. xlvi. l. 5. Stones of iral they strenkel and strewe.

The absence of this and of numerous other terms which occur in the present and following poems from Jamieson's Dictionary, induces me unwillingly to believe, that his work was executed but carelessly. The Doctor, had he pleased, might have found the word repeated in another piece he professes to have consulted.

Hir peytrelle was of irale fyne,
Hir cropoure was of orpharé,
And als clere golde hir brydille it schone;
One aythir syde hange bellys three.

Thomas off Ereyldoune, MS. Liuc., A. 1. 17, f. 149^b.

The meaning of the term, I confess, I am ignorant of. This practice of wearing precious stones on the armour became very general during the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, and the allusions to it in this and the succeeding poem are extremely frequent. So in a curious passage in the inedited Morte Arthure:

Thane ryse; the riche kyng, and rawghte one his wedys ;
 A reedde actone of Rosse, the richeste of floures,
 A pesane, and a paunsone, and a pris girdelle,
 And one he henttes a hode of scharlette fulle riche ;
 A Pauys pillione hatt, that pighte was fulle faire
 W^t perry of the oryent, and precyous stones ;
 His gloues gayliche gilte, and grauene by the hemmys,
 W^t graynes of rubyes, fulle gracious to schewe.

MS. Linc. A. 1, 17, f. 89^b.

P. 125, st. li. l. 4. Syr Owayne fyt; Uryene, and Arrake, fulle rathe, Marrake, and Menegalle, that maste were of myghte.

The reading of the Douce MS. Arrak f; Lake, is the more preferable. See with regard to this hero and Sir Owayne, the notes on the previous poem, ll. 113, 551. The third on the list is called Syre Mewreke in the romance of Syre Gawene and the Carle of Carelyle, l. 34, and appears to be the same as "Sir Marrok, the good knyghte, that was bitrayed with his wyf, for she made him seuen yere a werwolf," in Malory's Morte d'Arthur, ii. 385, and on a similar story is founded the Lai de Bisclaveret of Marie, ed. Roquefort, tome i. p. 179. For Menegalle (Moylard, MS. Douce,) we should perhaps read Menadeuke, a knight of Arthur's table frequently joined to the former, as in the following passage :

Sir Ewayne and Sir Errake, and othire gret lordes ;
 Demenys the medilwarde menskefully thare aftyre,
 With Merrake and Menyduke, myghtly of strenghes.

MS. Linc., 95^b.

Both of these heroes were slain in the battle against Mordred. Ibid. f. 97^b.

P. 126, st. lii. l. 4. Gryffons castelle, etc.

I must leave the illustration of this and the two following lines to those who may be more able to give it than myself. The readings of the Douce MS. make the localities still more perplexing than in the text.

P. 126, st. liii. l. 2. Alle the landes and the lythes, fra Lowyke to Layre,

The Lebynge, the Lowpyngge, the Leveastre Ile.

To elucidate the names of places probably disfigured by the English scribes of the MSS. requires more local knowledge than I possess, and no assistance has been derived from Macpherson's Geographical Illustrations, 4to, 1796, who ought to have had the passage before him. I heartily recommend the task to some Scottish antiquary.

P. 128, end. In Yggillwoode foreste, at the Ternwathelayne.

Inglewood forest in Cumberland was of great extent, being sixteen miles long and ten broad, lying between the rivers Shawk and Eden, and reaching from Carlisle to Penrith. It formerly abounded with deer, wild swine, and other beasts of the chace. In the Chronicle of Lanercost, under the year 1280, it is said that king Edward the First hunted there, and killed two hundred harts and hinds. The writer of the poem therefore in making this the scene of Arthur's adventure, renders his romance authority of greater credit, by its being supported by historical probability.

Golagros and Gawane.

THE present poem is so intimately connected with the preceding one in subject and style, that the authorship of both has been almost by general consent ascribed to one and the same writer, and consequently to the same period. Unfortunately no manuscript of the work is now known to exist, either in Scotland or England, and the only copy that can be traced is the one formerly contained in the Asloan MS. in the Auchinleck library, written about 1515, but subsequently, together with many other pieces of interest, severed from the volume. In the index of contents still remaining it is entered as "Sir Golagrus and Sir Gawane." For its preservation from total oblivion we are indebted to the earliest efforts of the Scottish press, established at Edinburgh, in 1508, by Chepman and Myllar, and it is, perhaps, owing to the popularity of their edition, that we find Gauen and Gollagras mentioned among the tales enumerated in the Complaynte of Scotland, 1549. In Lyndsay's Historie of Squyer Meldrum, composed about the same period, we also read,

Rolland with Brandwell, his bricht brand,
Faucht never better, hand for hand,
Nor Gawin aganis Gologras,
Nor Olyver with Pharambras.

Vol. ii. p. 296, ed. 1806.

From the unique copy of the black-letter 4to edition of 1508, preserved in the Advocates' Library, it was negligently reprinted by Pinkerton in his Scottish Poems, vol. iii. pp. 67-123, who divided it into four parts, and added an argument to each; and it appeared again, together with other pieces of Chepman and Myllar, in a limited fac-simile impression at Edinburgh in 1827. From this volume (which is now become extremely scarce, owing to a fire having destroyed most of the copies,) it is here reproduced in ordinary type, with no other changes than a substitution of the Saxon þ for its inadequate representative y, the rejection of obvious errors of the press (which are, however, retained at the foot of the page), and the use of regular punctuation, which is wholly omitted in the original.

I have already had occasion to advert to the error of Scott and others, in assigning these poems to the thirteenth century; an opinion chiefly founded "on the comparative absence of French words and phraseology, so fashionable in Scotland after the time of Robert Bruce." [1306-1329.] Now we learn from a curious passage in the inedited Latin chronicle attributed to Walter of Coventry, that as early as the reign of William the Lion the Scottish court had adopted the manners, dress, and even language of France¹, and this taste continued to prevail more or less to a comparatively recent period, and must have had considerable influence on Scottish literature in general. That such was the case at the close of the fourteenth century we have abundant proof in the various poems presumed to have been composed by Huchowne, which exhibit not only a familiar acquaintance with French compositions, but abound with words and phrases borrowed from that language. Yet, as it is nearly certain on other grounds that the present poem was composed in the first half of the fifteenth century, the argument of Scott necessarily falls to pieces. But the author of the prefatory remarks to the fac-simile reprint, in 4to, 1827, writes thus, "Had this romance, like so many of the English metrical romances, been a translation, it is unlikely that the author would have encumbered himself with such an intricate mode of versification; and therefore, it may be entitled to claim the praise of an original composition."—p. 8. To this it may be replied, that there is no reason why a Scottish writer, even when translating or imitating a foreign original, should not use whatever form of verse was popular in his own country (as in the case of Rauf Coilgear), and that this peculiar alliterative stanza was the most cultivated is evident from the numerous poems still remaining in it, even so late as the sixteenth century. But without further "fending and proving," the plain fact is this; that the author of Gologras and Gawane has borrowed the entire outline of his romance from the French Roman de Perceval. An abridgement of the original, as it appears in the prose version, printed in 1530, will best serve to shew the close imitation of the Scottish writer, and the fallacy of believing in "floating Celtic traditions."

King Arthur sets out with fifteen knights, amongst whom was Sir Gawayne, to undertake the delivery of Girflet, son of Do, from the Chateau Orgueilleux, where he had lain prisoner for three years. They issue from a forest into a plain of great extent, where the king is so fatigued with his journey and fasting, that he requires both meat and repose. They stop under a tree, by the side of a fountain, and Gawayne points out to Kay (Keux), the Seneschal, a mansion in a valley, to which the latter at once proceeds, in the hope of procuring some provisions. He finds only an old woman in the house, and no eatables of any sort; but the old woman tells him, that at no great distance was a castle, built by the Seigneur de Meliolant, where he generally amused himself with his hawks. She points it out to him, and Kay perceives that it is well environed with fish-ponds, woods, meadows, windmills, and orchards, in the midst of which stood a fair tower. Kay spurs his horse, rides up, and passes the drawbridge, but encountering nobody, he enters a spacious hall, and perceives a chimney with a large fire burning in it, at which a dwarf is diligently roasting a fat peacock on a spit made of apple-tree wood. The Seneschal inquires if any other person is within, but the dwarf does not deign to answer him, at which Kay is so angry, that he is near killing the dwarf on the spot. He restrains himself however, and merely says, he will take the peacock for his dinner, and for the king's repast. The dwarf swears he shall not have it, and tells him he will fare ill, if he does not depart quickly. After some more mutual ill language Kay strikes the dwarf such a blow, that he falls against the pillar of the chimney. He cries out lustily, and at the noise a door opens, and a tall fair knight enters the hall, not yet thirty years of age. He wore a robe of white samit, furred with ermine, and fastened by a girdle of gold, of great value. He led a greyhound by a green silk lace, and when he saw his dwarf bleeding, he asks of Kay why he had thus mal-treated his servant? The Seneschal replies rudely, on which the knight inquires his name. On being told, he says, that he would easily have been known by his manner of speaking, (a direct allusion to Kay the crabbed) and adds, that as it is not the custom of his house to refuse any viands asked for, Kay shall certainly have his share of the peacock. He then takes the bird, and strikes the Seneschal with it on the neck so violently, that he falls flat on the floor. The peacock is broken by the force of the blow, and the hot gravy runs in between the rings of Kay's hauberk, and scalds him cruelly, so that he bore the mark about his neck the remainder of his life. The knight then throws the remains to his greyhounds, and tells the Seneschal to leave the place; two attendants turn him out, and he returns much mortified to Arthur, to whom he relates what had taken place. Arthur does not credit Kay's representation, but sends Gawayne. He is received courteously by the knight, who invites the king and his companions to the mansion. They are entertained sumptuously, and Kay is ridiculed by all, the dwarf not excepted. The knight then discloses his name, which is Ydier le Bel, and offers to accompany Arthur to the Chateau Orgueilleux, but this is declined, and on the following day they take their leave.—fol. 103^b—105.

The above analysis comprehends the first eighteen stanzas of the poem before us. Let us now proceed to another portion of the same romance.

Arthur and his knights, accompanied by Brandelis (who will figure also in the Jeaste of Syr Gawayne), proceeds to the siege of the Chateau Orgueilleux (which is clearly identical with the castle of Gologrus). Soon after their arrival a horn is sounded from the castle, and on Arthur's inquiring the cause of Brandelis (who here takes the part of Spynagros), he is told, it is to warn the country of the approach of their forces. Knights approach on all sides to succour the lord of the castle, and three thousand shields and gonfanons are displayed from the walls. Lucan, the royal butler, asks to have the honour of jousting on the first day, which is granted. The place of combat is marked out by four olive trees, and the conditions are such, that whoever passed the bounds, was to be accounted recreant, and detained. Lucan forces his adversary from his horse, but contents himself with bringing back the steed as a proof of his victory, leaving the knight in the field. He is blamed by Brandelis for so doing, and on returning to the field, is encountered by another knight, wounded severely, and taken prisoner. Brandelis goes out the following day, and brings back his opponent prisoner to Arthur's camp. On the third day Kay undertakes the joust, and conquers his opponent, but violates the rules by going beyond the boundaries. The bells of the churches in the castle now sound, and Arthur is informed that the besieged are about to celebrate a festival in honour of the Virgin. Arthur therefore spends the day in hunting, and Gawayne rides out by himself, and meets the Riche Souldoyer, who is lord of the castle, and who had an appointment with a lady. The night is passed in great joy by the besieged—"grand bruit firent menestriers, de cors, tabours, fleuttes et trompes à jouer,"—until midnight. The succeeding day Ywain has the joust, and takes his adversary prisoner, the son of Count Blandigant of Ireland. Gawayne inquires of him who will joust on the next day, on the part of the besieged. He is assured that the Riche Souldoyer himself means to come forth. Gawayne asks of Arthur to be allowed the combat. It is granted, and Arthur lends him his famous sword Escalibor. On Gawayne's coming into the field, a horn is heard to sound four times, and is explained by Brandelis to signify by the first blast, that the Riche Souldoyer was about to arm himself; by the second and third, that his jambes, cuisses, hauberk, and helm were adjusted; and by the fourth, that he was mounted. The combat between this redoubtable knight and Gawayne is conducted with great strength and valour on both sides, and lasts till midday had passed. Gawayne sees his adversary's strength is failing, and deals him such a blow, that both combatants fall prostrate on the earth. Gawayne, however, recovers himself first, and commands the knight to yield, who refuses, and only utters some lamentations touching his mistress. Gawayne takes off the knight's helmet, who inquires his conqueror's name, and on learning it, he prays him for the sake of preserving the life of his amie, to accompany him to the castle, promising that he would afterwards be at the king's pleasure. Gawayne consents, and they return together. Arthur is utterly disconsolate, thinking his nephew is made prisoner,—“tel courroux en a le Roy pris, que plus ne le peult regarder, ains s'en va sur ung licit gesir, ou de son manteau le chief se couvrit.” On the approach of the knight and Gawayne, the lady is summoned, and Gawayne pushes his complaisance so far, as to give up his sword into her hands, and declares himself vanquished. She is then sent away, under the pretence of furnishing the chambers above, and as soon as she has left them, the knight causes Girflet, son of Do, and Lucan to be freed from their imprisonment, and the four, having arrayed themselves in rich robes, ride to Arthur's camp, to the great astonishment of the king and his barons. The Riche Souldoyer then states the circumstances of his defeat, and concludes by doing homage to Arthur for his lands, which is repeated by the knights his retainers. They feast and revel for a fortnight, and Arthur then takes his departure for Britain.—fol. 113—118^b.

P. 136, l. 119. Schir Kay is crabbit of kynde.

This is the constant character of Kay, both in the French and English romances of the Round Table, and crabbed seems to have been the epithet peculiarly appropriated to him. See The Grene Knight, l. 160; The Turke and Gowin, l. 19; and Carle of Carlile, l. 147. This character of him is also alluded to in the interlude of Thersites, (written in 1537,) in the passage,

P. 141, l. 261. Than schir Spynagrose with speche spak to the king.

This name is not an invention, for among the knights of Arthur's court is mentioned "Syr Epynogrys that was the kynges sone of Northumberland," Morte d'Arthur, vol. ii. p. 385. He is mentioned in the Roman de Tristan, ii. f. xc., under the name of "Espinogres né de Sorolois," and in the Roman de Perceval, f. clxviii. A knight of the same name occurs in the Conte de l'Atre Perilleux, one of Sir Gawayne's adventures. Bibl. des Romans, Juillet, 1777.

P. 143, l. 302. And socht to the ciete of Criste.

I do not recollect any other authority for this expedition of Arthur to Jerusalem, which seems to have been intended by the author as an imitation of Charlemagne's equally imaginary but better known travels to the same city ; on which subject may be consulted M. Michel's Preface to "Charlemagne, an Anglo-Norman poem of the twelfth century," etc., 12mo, Lond., 1836.

So reads the edition, but falsely. It should be Rone, as is evident by comparing ll. 585, 1345.

Whence this name? Can it be recognised in the Sir Galagars of Malory? vol. i. p. 95.

If we may believe Barbour, (who died in 1396,) the Scots first became acquainted with the use of artillery in the year 1328, but this requires confirmation.

Intended, apparently, for the personage who occurs in the romance of Perceforest, as the hero's brother, and who was himself made king of Scotland by the conqueror Alexander. See cap. xxviii. ed. fol. Par. 1531. I do not find his name among Arthur's knights.

P. 153, l. 557. Galiot.

This name as well as the remainder of those given to the knights on the side of Golagros seem to have been invented by the writer.

P. 154, l. 597. Schir Rannald.

He is mentioned in Malory's Morte d'Arthur, vol. i. p. 175 ; ii. 384.

P. 157, l. 661. Schir Lyonel, etc.

For the first three of these knights, see a previous note, p. 313. The fourth, Gyromalance (printed erroneously Siromelans in the prose edition of 1530), occurs frequently in the Roman de Perceval. He fights with Sir Gawayne, and afterwards marries Clarissant, the sister of his opponent, fol. liii^b.

P. 160, l. 747. Schir Cadour of Cornwel, etc.

Consult note, ante p. 331. Although all termed "renkis of the Round Tabill," I have looked unsuccessfully for Schir Owales, or Oviles, Schir Iwell, or Schir Myreot, unless the latter be Syr Melyot de Logres, in Malory's work, vol. ii. p. 383.

P. 165, l. 878. Oft in romanis I reid,

If by romanis we are here to understand the French language, we have a proverb equivalent to "Mauvaise haste n'est preus," in Renart le Nouvel, v. 1034, written by Jacquemars Gielée at the end of the thirteenth century. But there is a homely Scottish and English saying to the same effect,—“Mair haste the waur speed, quoth the tailor to the lang threed.” See Ramsay’s Poems, vol. ii. p. 60, 12mo, Glasg., 1797.

P. 167, l. 934. *With ane bitand brand, burly and braid,
Quhilk oft in battale had bene his bute and his belde.*

It is stated in the Roman de Merlin, f. ccix^b, that on occasion of the ceremony of knighthood conferred on Sir Gawayne, Arthur girded his nephew with his famous sword Escalibor, vol. i. f. ccix^b, and we find the weapon remaining for a period in Gawayne’s hands, for one of his exploits with it is to cut down his father Loth, whom he does not recognise till he alights to cut off his head. Ibid. vol. ii. f. liii. So also in the Roman de Lancelot, i. f. cxxxii^b, Gawayne is represented as fighting with Escalibor against Hector des Mares. At what period this sword was returned to Arthur we are not informed, but we find it borrowed again at the time Sir Gawayne is about to encounter the Riche Souldoyer. See Roman de Perceval, f. cxvii. Instances of the fanciful epithets given by heroes to their swords abound in old romances, and Warton tells us in a note on Spenser’s Fairy Queen, B. v. c. 3, st. 4, that Sir Gawayne’s sword was named Galantine. What authority he had for this I am not aware, but I find something like it in the inedited Morte Arthure:

Then Syr Gawayne was glade, agayne hyme he ryde;
Wythe Galuthe, his gude swerde, graythely hyme hytte;
The knyghte one the coursere he cleuede in soudyre,
Clenlyche fro the crowne his corse he dyuydyde,
And thus he kille; the knyghte w^t his kydd wapene.

MS. Linc., A. 1, 17, f. 68.

In a MS. which formerly belonged to Dr. Macro, No. 18, and is now in the possession of Hudson Gurney, Esq., written in the reign of Edward the First, I was the first to discover the following curious memorandum at f. 42^b, relative to the sword of Gawayne:—“Hec est forma gladii Wahwyn militis: a puncto usque ad hilte 53 pollices; hyste continet, ii. pollices et dimidii; manicle prope, ii. pollices; pomes continet prope 8 pollices; latitudo 5 pollices; longitudo in toto continet 66 pollices et dimidii. Unde scribere in canello gladii:

QUANT GALAAM ME TREMPA & FYTH.

SAGE FELOUN DEYT HOMME DUTYR
 & FOLH FELOUN ESCHWER ;
 FOLH DEBONEYRE DEPORTER,
 & SAGE DEBONER AMER."

In the Roman du St. Graal, vol. ii. f. cxli., may also be found an account of Gawayne's winning the famous sword with which John the Baptist was decollated, which is afterwards presented to king Pescheor, the professor of the holy vessel. And the reader may now decide for himself which sword it is that the author of the poem alludes to.

P. 179, l. 1233. Hectour, and Alexander, etc.

Six out of the eight names here mentioned are taken out of the number of the nine worthies. The remaining three are Charlemagne, Godfrey of Boulogne, and king Arthur. They are separately enumerated in the metrical Morte Arthure, MS. Linc., A. 1. 17, f. 89, and "Ane ballet of the Nine Nobles," printed in Laing's Popular Poetry of Scotland, 4to, 1822. They made a figure not only in poetry, but in pageantry and tapestry.

Syre Gawene and the Carle of Carelyle.

THIS romantic tale is here printed for the first time from an unique copy discovered in one of the MSS. of the Porkington Library, No. 10, belonging to William Ormsby Gore, Esq., M.P., written at the close of the reign of Henry the Sixth. It is more particularly interesting from its being the original from which the modernised copy in the Percy MS. was taken. The question, therefore, of the genuineness and antiquity of the romance-poems (as distinguished from the longer and better known romances.) in this celebrated MS. would seem to be decided, for as two of these poems, namely, The Grene Knight and The Carle of Carlile, have been preserved in MSS. of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, it is not too much to suppose, that the rest of the tales in the volume of a similar description, although written at so late a period as the latter half of the seventeenth century, were derived from ancient texts, which may yet be lurking in the unexplored treasures of some cathedral, collegiate, or private library.

The original of this story must be sought for in the literature of the continent, and we find it in the beautiful fabliau of Le Chevalier à l'Épée, printed in Meon's Recueil, tome i. p. 127, 8vo, 1823, and previously analysed by Le Grand. Both works are so well known as to render any repetition of it here unnecessary.

P. 188, l. 34. Syre Mewreke.

See previous note, p. 335.

Ibid. l. 35. Syre Key Cantoche.

I do not understand the meaning of this appellation added to the name of Kay. In Malory, we have "Kay the Straunger," vol. ii. p. 403, but this is a corruption of Keux d'Estraux, who repeatedly occurs in the French romances, and who was a different personage from the Seneschal.

Ibid. l. 38. Syre Percivalle.

The nephew of king Pescheor, guardian of the Sangreal, whose adventures occupy a quarto volume, printed in 1530. In the Thornton MS. at Lincoln is an English metrical abridgement of this romance, but so indifferently executed, as scarcely to be worth printing.

Ibid. l. 39. Lanfalle

Is the hero of a lay by Marie de France, printed in Roquefort's Edition, tome i. p. 202, of which an English translation, made in the fifteenth century, is inserted in Way's Fabliaux, vol. iii. p. 233, 8vo, 1815, and Ritson's Metrical Romances, vol. i.

Ibid. l. 40. Syre Eweyne the Vytt yan.

There is some blunder here. Perhaps we should read Wytt hand, which would express the epithet given to Ywain as Blanches Mains. See Morte d'Arthur, i. 231.

Ibid. l. 41. Syre Lot of Laudyane.

The father of Gawayne, and king of Lothian and Orkney. Geoffr. Monm. lib. ix. cap. 9.

Ibid. l. 43. Syre Gaytefere and Syre Galerowne.

The first of these is probably the Gaudifeir, previously mentioned, p. 342, and the latter is the Galeron of Galloway, whose exploits are commemorated in the Avntyrs of Arthure.

Ibid. l. 44. *Syre Costantyne, and Syre Raynbrowne,
The knyzt of armus grene.*

Sir Constantyne has occurred before, p. 331. Of the latter I know nothing as one of Arthur's knights, but it would appear from l. 68, that he was the son of Iroune-syde by the maiden of Blancheland. A knight of the same name occurs in the romance of Guy of Warwick.

Ibid. l. 49. The kyngus vncull Syre Mordrete.

For uncle we should read nephew. In the modern version of this romance, p. 257, and in the Marriage of Sir Gawaine, p. 289, he is called Arthur's cousin, but this is a general term of relationship.

Of this personage, any more than of Syre Grandone, or Syr Ferre-unkowthe, l. 61, I have found no record.

Ibid. l. 55. Syre Le Byus Dyskonus was thare.

This is no less a person than Giglan, the son of Gawayne, who received the surname of Le Beau Desconu from king Arthur, on his first arrival at that monarch's court. According to the Roman de Perceval he was the illicit offspring of an amour between Gawayne and Guinalorete, the sister of Brandelys; and an interesting scene occurs, in which the mother interposes her child between her brother and lover, whilst struggling in mortal combat, fol. cxi. He is committed to the care of the Pucelle Envoisie, and achieves various adventures, from one of which he obtains the surname of Lyoncel. At length he encounters his father (who is unknown to him,) and after a fierce combat, Gawayne recognises his son, and yields himself. The young hero is then taken to Arthur's court at Caerleon, and receives instructions in all chivalrous exercises from Ywain. Ibid. ff. cxxiv, cxxv. The adventures of Giglan form the subject of a very rare distinct prose French romance, which was printed at Paris without date, and afterwards at Lyons, in 1530. In this he is said to be the son of Gawayne by the fairy Blanchevallée. There is also an English romance, on the same subject, expressly stated to be borrowed from the French, but differing almost entirely from the prose work. It is printed by Ritson in vol. ii. of his Metrical Romances, and many of the incidents seem to have been supplied by the romance of Erec et Enide, composed by Chrestien de Troyes. That there existed, however, a French metrical romance as early as the twelfth century on the exploits of Giglan, is proved by the German romance of Wigolais mit dem Rade, translated from the French by Wirnt von Gravenberch, about the year 1212. In this poem the name of Wigolais is intended to represent Gui le Galois, l. 1574. In the English romance (l. 7) his name is written Geymleyn, and in Malory's Morte d'Arthur, vol. i. p. 337, ii. pp. 383, 392, Gyngalyn. For further information concerning the versions of this romance, see Benecke's preface to his edition of Wigolais, 12mo, Berl. 1819.

P. 189, l. 58. Syr Petty-pas of Wynchylse

Is mentioned in the Morte d'Arthur, vol. ii. p. 383, and elsewhere, and occurs also in the list of knights given in Robinson's "Auncient ordre of Prince Arthur," etc., 4to, 1583, No. 54.

Ibid. l. 64. Syr Blancheles and Iron-side.

In the modern version, p. 257, Blanch Faire is substituted for Blancheles, but as no knight of that name occurs, in all probability we should read Brandelys, of whom more hereafter. The second knight is mentioned in Malory's compilation as "Syre Ironsyde, that was called the noble knyghte of the reed lanndes, that Syre Gareth [brother of Gawayne] wanne for the loue of dame Lyones," vol. ii. p. 384. The narrative of the combat may be read in vol. i. p. 211.

The Seigneur de la Blanche londe is noticed as one of Arthur's knights, in the Roman de Perceval, f. lxxi. Cf. f. clxxi^b. See in regard to this territory a note of M. Michel on Tristan, ii. 173.

P. 205, l. 631. A knyghte of the Table Rounde.

No knight of this name occurs in the French romances of the Round Table, nor in the Morte d'Arthure of Malory.

P. 206, l. 655. And there yn monkys gray.

A house of Gray or Franciscan friars existed at Carlisle before the year 1390. See Tanner's Notit. Monast. edit. Nasmith, fol. 1787.

The Feaste of Syr Gawayne.

THIS imperfect poem is taken from a small quarto MS. which was purchased at the Fairfax sale at Leeds castle in 1831, and subsequently came to the hands of Mr. Douce, who bequeathed it with the rest of his books to the Bodleian Library. The volume was written in 1564, as appears by a date at the end, and contains several other romances, all unfortunately more or less imperfect, and all, apparently, transcribed from early black-letter editions. Each romance is illustrated with rude drawings, and from their style, as well as the age of the MS. it is evident that the collection was made by the same hand which transcribed the romance of Roberte the Deuyll, printed by J. Herbert in 1798. No copy of the original, from which the present poem was copied, is now known to exist; but it appears from the Stationers books, that in 1557 or 1558 John Kynge had a license to print "A Jeaste of Syr Gawayne," and among Bagford's Collections, MS. Harl. 5927, art. 32, is preserved the last leaf of another edition in black letter, "Imprynted at London in Paule churche yarde, at the sygne of the maydens heed, by Thomas Petyt," containing fifty-three lines, which have been collated with the text in the MS., and the variations, which are trifling, noted in the margin. It is no doubt this romance which is alluded to, under the title of "Sir Gawyn," by Laneham, in his letter describing the entertainment of the Queen at Kenilworth in 1575. Of what antiquity the story may have been in an English dress, it is difficult to form an opinion, but I should be inclined to refer it to the fifteenth century. The original author, however, in this instance, as in so many others, is French, and in the Roman de Perceval, f. lxxiv^b, we meet with the entire story. As the commencement of the adventure is wanting in the MS., a short analysis of the French narrative may not be out of place.

Gawayne leaves king Arthur at the siege of the city of Branlant, at which he had himself been severely wounded. He crosses a deep river, and rides along a beautiful plain to a wood, on emerging from which he finds himself in a spacious launde, on which he perceives, by the side of a fountain, a magnificent pavilion raised. The valances were of fine silk of different colours, richly embroidered in gold and silver with flowers, foliage and birds, whilst above the ball on the summit was a golden eagle. He dismounts and enters the pavilion, where he sees a sumptuous bed, on which lay a lovely girl, "qui si formellement belle estoit, que pour ce temps n'eust été trouvé la pareille." Gawayne is exceedingly surprised at her beauty, and accosts her courteously. In reply she says, "Dieu qui fist soir et matin doint honneur au chevalier Gauvain; puis à vous qui estes icy!" He inquires why she expresses herself thus, and in explanation learns, that from the fame of Gawayne's great prowess, courtesy, and other qualities, she has long been accustomed to use such terms. The knight then discloses himself, and unlaces his helmet, to shew his features, on which the lady retires to an adjoining room, and calls to her a Saracen damsel, who had been fille de chambre to queen Chambres, and who had portrayed in embroidery the portrait of Gawayne so exactly, as to be recognised by all who saw it. Whilst she is contemplating his features, Sir Gawayne disarms himself, and puts on a splendid mantle. On the lady's return she at once acknowledges the original of her picture, and runs to embrace him, kissing his eyes "par grant amour," and saying, "Sire, la pucelle, comme voyez, du tout se mect à vostre bandon, et de son corps vous faict present, tout par amours et en honneur, si vous plaist à la recevoir." Of course the knight is not insensible of the value of such a gift,—"et puis se mirent à deviser du jeu d'amours, sans villennie, et apres s'entrejouerent, en ensuivant le doulx parler, que le nom de pucelle perdist." Gawayne at length takes leave of her, and immediately after his departure arrives her father, the king of Lys, and on learning what had occurred, pursues the knight, and accuses him of the death of his brother, and the violation of his daughter. Gawayne overthrows him with a mortal blow, and pursues his way. Shortly after, Brandelys the lady's brother, makes his appearance at the pavilion, and on hearing the same story, rides after and overtakes the author of the injury. They encounter each other fiercely, and are both thrown to the ground, but continue the combat with their swords until they are both weary. Gawayne at length proposes a cessation of arms, and to renew the combat whenever they should again meet. This is agreed to, and the combatants separate. Brandelys carries the corpse of his father to an abbey, to be honourably interred; and Gawayne returns to Arthur's host at the siege of Branlant, but is so enfeebled by his wounds as to require the attendance of physicians for six months before he was perfectly recovered.

At a subsequent part of the romance (f. cv.), the continuation of Gawayne's adventure is thus related.

Arthur and his court arrive at a stately castle, which proves to be the residence of Brandelys. They find a sumptuous banquet prepared for some guest, and no less than a hundred wild-boars' heads provided! Whilst at the feast Gawayne discovers the shield of Brandelys hanging up, and recollecting the terms of their agreement, hastens to replace his helmet on his head, which he had laid aside. On being questioned as to the cause, he relates his adventure at the pavilion, which differs so considerably from the preceding narrative, as justly to excite the surprise of Southey, Pref. to Morte d'Arthur, p. xxvi. In this version of the story Gawayne states, that on arriving at the pavilion he found the lady asleep, and struck by her beauty, he took off his helmet, and kissed her several times so softly, as not to awaken her, except a faint remonstrance of "Beau sire, laissez moy dormir." At last she awoke, and inquired who he was. He says, her amy, but she bids him fly, for fear of the vengeance of her father and brothers. He tells his name, and is then courteously welcomed. Gawayne afterwards disarmed himself, and proceeds with his tale thus,—"Puis m'allay coucher aspres d'elle, comme pour faire mon delict; les yeulz luy beise et le visaige, qu'elle plus blans que lys avoit, et depuis feis si grand cultraige, qu' à force la despucelay, quelque defence qu'elle sceust faire." The lady was in the utmost grief, and fainted in Gawayne's arms, when Melians de Lys, one of her brothers, arrived, and bursting into the pavilion, loaded Gawayne with reproaches. The knight made every submission, and offered to marry the lady, but Melians reviled them both, and insisted on having recourse to arms. They fought, and the brother was struck dead on the first encounter. The father then came up, and shared the same fate, much to the grief of Gawayne. Lastly arrived Brandelys, and having refused the conciliatory offers of the offender, a combat took place, as previously narrated.

It is evident that the author of the English romance has adopted the latter narrative, merely changing the names of the parties, and introducing a few additions of his own. The sequel of the adventure, omitted by the English writer, is thus told in the original text.

Brandelys, on hearing that his foe was within his castle, hastens to take revenge. As it was now late in the evening, candles are sent for, and a furious combat ensues by their light between Gawayne and his opponent. At this juncture the lady (whose name we subsequently learn to be Guinalorete,) makes her appearance with her child Giglain, whom she interposes between its father and uncle. Brandelys, so far from being softened by the sight, brutally kicks the child away, which excites the indignation of Arthur. The fight is resumed, and Brandelys is at length struck down. The lady again interposes, and her entreaties being seconded by the interference of the king and his nobles, Brandelys is persuaded to yield, and the adventure terminates by his being made a knight of the Round Table, and granting forgiveness to the penitent Gawayne, who begs it on his knees.

The compiler of the Morte d'Arthur does not insert this episode in his work, but has a distinct allusion to the circumstance, when he says, "Thenne came in Syr Gawayne, with his thre sones, Syr Gyngleyn, Syr Florence, and Sir Louel; these two were begoten upon Sir Brandyles syster; and al they fayled."—Vol. ii. p. 383. Sir Brandelys was subsequently, together with Florence and Louel, slain by Lancelot du Lac and his party, at the rescue of queen Guenever. Ibid. ii. 401, 403.

P. 217, l. 347. Theron of pleasaunce a kercheyf dyd honge.

See Meyrick's Glossary to his Critical Inquiry, in v. Kercheff of Plesauunce. It was sometimes worn on the arm. But a lady's favour was occasionally in another shape, as we learn from the Roman de Perceval, f. lxxxiii. "Et pour secretement faire cete chose assçavoir à Alardin par signe, luy donna la manche de sa cote, que nous appellons mancherons, de quoy il feist ung gonfanon ou banerolle à sa lance." Cf. Malory, ii. 332.

P. 219, l. 422. Syr Gawayne saide, "Syr, I the praye, etc.

So also in the original text, "Il me semble, franc chevallier, respond Gauvain, que vous deussiez plus honestement ou plus prudentement parler, car se je vous ay fait nul dommaige, je suis tout prest de l'amender, au loz de tous noz bons amys, mais que n'y perde mon honneur; mais quant à la trahison que vous me mettez sus, je m'en veulx contre vous deffendre."—f. lxxv^b.

The Grene Knight.

COPIED in 1831 by permission of the late Mrs. Samuel Isted of Ecton Hall, Northamptonshire, (eldest daughter of the Bishop of Dromore,) from the Percy Manuscript. It is noticed in the list of Romances prefixed to the third volume of the "Reliques of Ancient Poetry," p. xxxvii. ed. 1794, and was considered of sufficient interest by the Bishop to be transcribed, for the purpose of insertion in a subsequent edition. The singular volume which contains it may be assigned to the latter half of the seventeenth century, and abounds with inaccuracies of the scribe or compiler. It is here, however, printed literatim from the MS., except in cases where correction is absolutely necessary, and the corrupt readings are then thrown to the bottom of the page. Had Bishop Percy adopted the same plan, when printing his Ballads, even the hypercriticism of Ritson might have been satisfied. It will readily be admitted, I presume, that the Scottish romance at the beginning of the present volume is the original from which the later tale has been borrowed; but that it may have existed in some intermediate shape, is rendered highly probable by an entry in the inventory of English books belonging to John Paston of Norfolk, made in the reign of Edward the Fourth, in which occurs "The Greene Knight." Orig. Letters, vol. ii. p. 300, 4to, 1787.

The changes made in the story, in its recent form, are very remarkable, and serve to shew the extent and character of the license assumed by minstrels and poetasters, in reciting the compositions of their predecessors, or in borrowing from foreign sources. The fairy Morgana of the ancient romance is here changed into Aggteb, a witch, who is endowed with the power of transposing human forms; and instead of the Grene Knight's visit to Arthur's court being made for the purpose of annoying Guenever, it is here designed by the old witch as a means of alluring Gawayne to her daughter's arms. The general outline is, however, precisely the same, but the narrative much abridged in the rifacimento. It is somewhat remarkable, that the latter places the scene "in the West Countrye," instead of the North, as one would have expected to find it.

P. 224, l. 13. *He made the Round Table for their behoue,
Y^t none of them shold sitt aboue.*

The earliest authority for this tradition is Wace, who inserts it in his translation of Geoffrey, and adds, that the Round Table was instituted by Arthur for the purpose of avoiding disputes of precedence among his knights. See the passage in Le Roux de Lincy's edition, tome ii. p. 74, 8vo, 1836. Robert of Brunne translates this literally in the inedited portion of his Chronicle, f. 62^b, MS. Inner Temple Library, No. 511. 7. Lazamon goes further, and not only gives the history of the table at much greater length, but adds from some source at present unknown, a narrative of a quarrel which was the more immediate cause of the institution. In an inedited romance on the subject of Arthur, preserved in the Red Book of Bath, of the fifteenth century, I find the following lines on the subject :

At Cayrlyoun, w^t oute fable
He let make the Rounde Table,
And why th^t he maked hyt thus
This was the resoun y-wyss,
That no man schulde sytt aboue other,
Ne haue indignacioun of hys brother.
And alle had oo seruyse,
For no pryde scholde aryse,
For any degree of syttynge,
Other for any seruynge.

P. 225, l. 40. Sir Bredbeddle.

On what authority the Green Knight is thus named I am ignorant, but in this case it is no mistake of the scribe, for we meet with the same personage again in the ballad of Arthur and the King of Cornwall. He can scarcely be meant for the individual who is surnamed also the Grene Knyght in the Morte d'Arthur, and whose real name was Pertilope, the brother of Sir Persaunt and Sir Perymore, all of whom were defeated by Sir Gareth, younger brother of Sir Gawayne. See vol. i. pp. 196, 223 ; ii. p. 385.

P. 227, l. 92. *Att a castle of Flatting was his dwelling,
In the Forrest of Delamore.*

The forest of Delamere is an immense tract of wood and waste in Cheshire, and was formerly well stocked with deer. Of the Castle of Flatting I have found no mention elsewhere. It is, doubtless, a corruption. See Ormerod's Cheshire, vol. ii. p. 50, fol., 1819.

P. 239, l. 461. He hard him whett a fauchion bright.

Compare the lines in the original, l. 2203, p. 81.

P. 240, l. 465. It behooueth thee to lowte.

In the margin of the MS. Dr. Percy has noted after this line, "some great omission here." I confess I do not perceive it.

P. 241, l. 506. To the Castle of Hutton can they fare.

Perhaps the manor of Hutton in Inglewood forest, Leath ward, Cumberland, is here intended. See Nicolson and Burn's Hist. Cumb., ii. 388, or Hutchinson, i. 506. There is also Hatton Castle, in Allerdale below Derwent, in the same county. The whole of the territory hereabout was romance-ground.

Ibid. l. 515. Why k^{tes} of the Bathe weare the lace.

Compare the original text, l. 2516, p. 92, which is very strangely altered here. The lace alluded to was of white silk, and worn on the left shoulder, as early as the reign of Richard the Second. See Austis's "Observations upon the Knighthood of the Bath," 4to, 1725, pp. 9, 32, 35, 75. From a curious passage in Lord Herbert of Cherbury's Life, written by himself, 4to, 1764, p. 54, we learn that the practice was still observed in the reign of James the First, and that the Knights were obliged to wear the lace until they had done something famous in arms, or till some lady of honor had taken it off.

The Turke and Gowin.

FROM the Percy Manuscript, and hitherto unpublished. The commencement of this singular romance-tale is evidently founded on a different version of the adventure related in the Grene Knyght, who is here transformed into a Turk, or, in other words, a Pagan. The poem, unfortunately, is very imperfect, and the connexion is not always obvious, but the story seems to run thus. After the buffet has been given by Gawayne, the Turk goes away, accompanied by the knight, and they repair to a castle, where the counter-buffet is demanded by the Turk. We next find them, after this proof of Gawayne's courage, sailing over the sea as friends, and they arrive at a castle inhabited by the King of Man, (who is a heathen Soldan,) and a rout of giants. A trial of skill takes place at tennis, in which Gawayne is assisted by the Turk, who passes for the knight's boy. Other trials of strength follow, which end in the discomfiture of the giants. The Soudan and one of his rout lay some plan to kill Gawayne, but are prevented by the Turk, who puts on a coat to make him invisible, and throws the giant into a boiling cauldron of lead, and the Soudan into the fire. After this, to complete the adventure, the Turk desires Gawayne to strike off his head, who at first refuses, but on his compliance, in the place of the Turk rises up a stalworth knight, who immediately sings Te Deum, by way of thankfulness, and to prove his orthodoxy. By this feat the ladies and knights confined in the castle are delivered from thraldom, and the kingdom of Man having first been offered by Arthur to Gawayne, who refuses it, it is bestowed on Sir Gromer, the quondam Turk, as a recompense for his services.

From the versification, this poem evidently proceeds from the same hand which composed the preceding one; nor will it, perhaps, be wrong to assign to one hand the greater part, if not the whole, of the romance-stories in the Manuscript.

P. 255, l. 318. Sir Gromer.

This name is probably borrowed from the Morte d'Arthur, in which "Syr Grummursum, a good knyghte of Scotland," is mentioned, vol. i. p. 229, and elsewhere.

Carle off Carlile.

FROM the Percy Manuscript, and printed for the first time. It is most certainly a rifacimento of the older romance in the Porkington MS., and retains not only words but entire lines of the original. Some few alterations, however, as a matter of course, are introduced; and at the end of the poem an incident is inserted, altogether omitted in the older copy, namely the striking off the Carle's head, which corresponds nearly with the similar performance in the tale of The Turke and Gowin. The Notes on the earlier text may be referred to for illustration of the present poem.

King Arthur and the King of Cornwall.

FROM the same Manuscript, and hitherto inedited. It has no title, and the first line has been cut away by the ignorant binder to whom the volume was intrusted, but both are supplied from the notice given of the ballad in the Dissertation prefixed to vol. iii. of the "Reliques," p. xxxvii. Dr. Percy has added in the margin of the MS. these words, "To the best of my remembrance, this was the first line, before the binder cut it." The poem is very imperfect, owing to the leaves having been half torn away to light fires (!) as the Bishop tells us, but I am bound to add, previous to its coming into his possession. The story is so singular, that it is to be hoped an earlier and complete copy of it may yet be recovered. On no account perhaps is it more remarkable, than the fact of its close imitation of the famous gabs made by Charlemagne and his companions at the court of king Hugon, which are first met with in a romance of the twelfth century, published by M. Michel from a MS. in the British Museum, 12mo, Lond., 1836, and transferred at a later period to the prose romance of Galien Rethoré, printed by Verard, fol. 1500, and often afterwards. In the absence of other evidence, it is to be presumed that the author of the ballad borrowed from the printed work, substituting Arthur for Charlemagne, Gawayne for Oliver, Tristram for Roland, etc., and embellishing his story by converting king Hugon's spy into a "lody feend," by whose agency the gabs are accomplished. It is further worthy of notice, that the writer seems to regard Arthur as the sovereign of Little Britain, and alludes to an intrigue between the king of Cornwall and queen Guenever, which is nowhere, as far as I recollect, hinted at in the romances of the Round Table.

P. 276, l. 26. Sir Marramiles and Sir Tristeram.

As four knights accompanied the king, a line would seem to be wanting here, containing the names of Sir Gawayne and Sir Bredbeddle. Of the remaining two, Sir Tristeram is sufficiently well known, but of Sir Marramiles I am unable to supply any information.

P. 283, l. 195. "Sayes, sleep you, wake you, noble King Arthur?"

This is a phrase which seems to have been popular at the end of the sixteenth century, and may, perhaps, mark the age of the ballad. See the song of Old Robin of Portingale, in Percy, iii. 49, edit. 1794; Ravenscroft's Pammelia, 4to, 1609, No. 30; and Scott's Border Minstrelsy, vol. i. p. 151, 8vo, 1803. It is alluded to by Shakspeare in King Lear, Act. iii. Sc. 5, where Edgar, repeating some snatches of old ballads, says,

Sleepest or wakest thou, jolly shepherd?

P. 284, l. 210. The Grene knight.

This is Sir Bredbeddle, who has subdued the fiend Burlow-beanie by means of the "litle booke," he carried about him. See a previous Note, p. 353.

Marriage of Sir Gawaine.

THIS fragment is borrowed from the text of the Percy Manuscript, as given in the "Reliques of Ancient English Poetry," vol. iii. p. 350, edit. 1794. Dr. Percy supplied the deficiencies in a very ingenious manner, and inserted the ballad thus amended in the first edition of his collection, 8vo, 1764, and repeated it in all subsequent impressions; but this mode of editing ancient poetry having justly been blamed by Ritson and Pinkerton, the Bishop in the fourth edition annexed the fragment, "with all its defects, inaccuracies and errata," in order to show the state of the poem in the MS. Ritson reprinted the genuine and the amended texts in parallel columns in the Dissertation prefixed to his Metrical Romances, 8vo, 1802, p. cx, and the ballad in its improved form was introduced also by Lewis into his Tales of Wonder, vol. ii. p. 362, 8vo, 1802. The Bishop was of opinion that this poem was more ancient than the time of Chaucer, and that he borrowed from it his Wife of Bath's tale (See Cambro-Briton, vol. i. p. 256, 8vo, 1820); and Sir Walter Scott in a letter to George Ellis writes, that the tale of Sir Gawayne's Foul Lady is originally Scaldic, as appears in the history of Hrolf Kraka, edited by Torfæus, 12mo, Havn. 1715, cap. vii. (Life, by Lockhart, vol. i. p. 334.) The passage itself is quoted from the Saga by Scott in his Border Minstrelsy, vol. ii. p. 140, in illustration of the old Scottish ballad of King Henrie, which preserves very remarkably the legend of the Scandinavian monarch, Helgius.

Warton says in a note to his "History of English Poetry," vol. ii. p. 41, ed. 1824, "I must not forget here, that Sir Gawaine, one of Arthur's champions, is celebrated in a separate romance. Among Tanner's Manuscripts we have The Weddyng of Sir Gawaine, Numb. 455, Bibl. Bodl. It begins, 'Be ye blythe, and listeneth to the lyf of a lorde riche.'" It would have given me much pleasure to have included this romance in the present volume, but Warton's reference is erroneous, and although the Rev. Dr. Bandinel with the greatest courtesy undertook a minute and laborious search for the poem in question, it was without success. Warton's notorious inaccuracy in matters of this sort forms a sad blot in his otherwise very useful and entertaining work, of which a critical edition is still much desiderated.

P. 289, l. 32. Tearne-wadling.

See previous Note, in p. 330.

P. 293, l. 116. Sir Lancelott and Sir Steven bold.

The name of the second of these champions does not occur in the Round Table romances.

Ibid. l. 120. Soe did Sir Banier and Sir Bore, Sir Garrett with them, soe gay.

Banier is probably a mistake for Beduer, the king's constable. Sir Bore is Bors de Gauves. (See previous Note, p. 313.) Sir Garett is Gareth or Gaheriet, the younger brother of Sir Gawayne; and his adventures, under the surname of Beaumayns, occupy an entire book,—the seventh,—in the Morte d'Arthur, vol. i. pp. 186–245. He took the part of Lancelot against his brothers, but was accidentally killed by him on the occasion of the rescue of queen Guenever. Ibid. vol. ii. p. 403. Revenge for his loss prompted Sir Gawayne to induce king Arthur to cross the sea to attack Lancelot, which ultimately proved the destruction of the whole of the Table Ronde. Sir Walter Scott in a Note on Sir Tristrem, p. 379, ed. 1833, quotes a “romance of Sir Gaheret,” in which the knight plays at chess with a beautiful fairy, [Floribelle, a suivante of the fairy Morgana,] and is vanquished, but is afterwards liberated from his confinement by his cousin [brother] Gawayne, who wins the game by a move long afterwards called l'échec de Gauvain, and now l'échec du berger, or fool's-mate. In reality there is no such romance, but the adventure here alluded to occurs in an episodic tale of Gawayne and his three brothers, analysed in the Bibliothèque des Romans, Juillet, 1777, pp. 87–122. I may here venture to correct another venial error of Scott, who in the same work, p. 416, quotes from Gower the lines,

There was Tristrem, which was beloved
With bele Isolde; and Lancelot
Stode with Guenor, and Galahote
With his lady.

Sir Walter argues, that Gower is here incorrect, since Galahaut or Galahad had no paramour. But Gower is perfectly accurate, and alludes to Gallehault, king of the loingtaines isles or de outre les marches, whose mistress was Malchault, lady in attendance on queen Guenever, and by whose instrumentality the intrigue of Lancelot with her mistress was brought about. See the Roman de Lancelot, vol. i. ff. lxxxiii-v, edit. 1513. Scott confounds this Gallehault with Galaad, the immaculate son of Lancelot, who accomplished the adventure of the Sangreal.

AUENTAYLE, the open and moveable portion of the helmet which covered the mouth, for the purpose of respiration, GK. 608. So in the alliterative Scottish romance of Morte Arthure,

He braydez one a bacenett, burneschte of syluer,
 The beste that was in Basille, wyth bordurs ryche;
 The creste and the coronalle enclosed so faire,
 Wyth clasppes of clere golde, couched wyth stones;
 The vesare, the aventaille, enarmede so faire,
 Voyde w^t owttynne vice, w^t wyndowes of syluer.
MS. Linc. A. 1. 17. f. 63.

This term is frequently used in early writers for the whole front of the helmet, including the visor, and much confusion has hence arisen. Consult Allou's paper Sur les Casques du Moyen Age, 4^{me} epoque, published in the Memoires des Antiquaires de France, Nouv. Ser., tome i. pp. 161-191, 8vo, 1835. It must be also remarked, that in the prose French romances of the Round Table, the ventaille is a distinct piece of armour, and put on before the helmet. See particularly Roman de Perceval, f. cxii, cxiv^b, ed. 1530; Roman de Lancelot, vol. i. f. xlii. ed. 1513; Rom. de Meliadus, f. clxxi. ed. 1528; and Rom. de Merlin, vol. ii. f. cx^b, ed. 1498.

 BAYST, p. t. was abashed, GK. 376. A word of no unusual occurrence, from the Fr. abaïsser. Stevenson quotes it incorrectly the bayst, and then, without any authority, converts bayst into a substantive, and explains it blow. On re-considering the passage, I think he will be convinced of his mistake. See Boucher, v. Baist.

BAYTHE, to grant, GK. 327. BAYTHE, BAYTHEN, pr. t. 1404, 1840. Stevenson is here again greatly in error. He prints the line, schal bay then thy bone, and interprets bay by obey! It is in defence of my own explanations that I feel obliged to notice these mistakes in a truly valuable work, which I still trust will be continued.

 BALȚE, ample, swelling, GK. 2032, 2172. Mr. Stevenson, however, explains it in the sense of plain, smooth.

BAN, to curse, TG. 157. BANNE, BANNENE, pr. t. AA. vii. 11. MS. D. xlvi. 7.
 BANKERS, BANKOWRES, table-clothes, AA. xxvii. 4. MS. D. xxxv. 2.
 BANRENT, banneret, noble, GG. 207, 1335.
 BANRENTIS, pl. 5, 1274.
 BARAYNE, barren, applied to hinds not gravid, GK. 1320. BARAYNES, BARRAYNE, pl. used substantively, AA. iv. 2.
 BARBE, edge of an axe, GK. 2310. BARBEZ, pl. points of arrows, 1457.
 BARBICAN, out-work or tower of a castle, GK. 793.
 BARBORANNE, barberry, a shrub, AA. vi. 6. See BERBER.
 BARCELETT, species of bow, AA. iii. 12, iv. 1. See Stevenson's Add. to Boucher, v. Berselet.

BARE, mere, unconditional, GK. 277. In GK. 1141, it is applied to the motes or blasts of a horn, and seems to mean short, or without rechate. It is used adverbially, 465.
 BARELY, unconditionally, certainly, GK. 548.
 BARE-HEUEDIS, boars' heads, AA. xxx. 8. See BER-HEDIS.
 BARET, BARRAT, strife, contest, GK. 21, 353, 2115; grief, GK. 752. AA. xxiii. 4. GG. 1133.

- BARFRAY, tower, GG. 774. By the mention of bells in the following line the connexion between this word and belfrey would seem to be established. See Stevenson's Add. to Boucher, in v.
- BARLAY, apparently a corruption of the French par loi, GK. 296.
- BARNE, child, AA. xxiv. 11. MS. D. Applied to Christ, xviii. 1. See BERNE.
- BARRED, p. p. striped diagonally, GK. 159, 600. See Tyrwhitt's Notes on Chaucer, iv. 150, ed. 1822, and Warton's Hist. Engl. Poetr. ii. 213. Stevenson interprets it cross-chequered, but, I think, erroneously.
- BARRES, diagonal stripes, GK. 162.
- BARTYNYT, p. p. struck, battered, GG. 716. The Editor of the reprint of 1827 is mistaken in wishing to read Barkynit.
- BASNET, see BACENETT.

- BELDE, see BEILD.
- BELE-CHERE, good company or presence, GK. 1034.
- BELEF, badge? GK. 2486, 2517. Has this word any connexion with the Fr. belif, as it appears in the following passage? "Et quel escu portiez vous? Dame, je portay à la premiere foys ungescu blanc à une bande de belif vermeille."—Rom. de Lancelot, i. f. lxxxii. Elsewhere I find "une bende blanche de bellif."—ib. i. f. cxxx.
- BELIFE, BE-LYFE, quickly, AA. xxxix. 3. GG. 369, 622. See BILIUE.
- BELLE, bonfire, AA. xv. 6.
- BELLE, part of a lady's dress, perhaps the mantle, AA. xxix. 3.
- BEMYS, trumpets, GG. 467.
- BEMYT, p. p. summoned by sound of trumpet, GG. 746.
- BEN, prompt, ready, c. 302. See BAINE.
- BE-NAME, p. t. took, acquired, GG. 227.
- BENDE, band, bond, GK. 2505, 2517.

BENDE, p. t. and p. p. bent, GK. 305, 2224; put down, 2105.

BENE, to be, GK. 141. BEN, pr. t. are or will be, 1646.

BENE, well, fair, GK. 2402, 2475. GG. 601, 688, 844, 1032. AA. vi. 6. xxix. 4. xxx. 3. lii. 8. In every instance but one this word is coupled with ful. It is impossible to interpret the majority of these passages by quickly, as Stevenson would have us. See his Additions to Boucher, in v.

BENT, plain, field, so denominated from a coarse grass growing on open lands. GK. 353, 1465, 1599, 2115, 2233, 2338. AA. xxvi. 5, xlix. 5. GG. 156, 637. c. 68.

BER, beer, GK. 129.

BER-HEDIS, BERE-HEDES, boars' heads, AA. xxx. 8. MS. D. GG. 605. See BARE-HEUEDIS.

BERN, barn, GC. 52.

BER, BERJE, mount, hill, GK. 2172, 2178.

BESANDIS, BESANTES, besants, AA. xxix. 4. GG. 1086.

BEST, beast, animal, GK. 1436. AA. 553. BESTES, pl. 1377.

BE-STAD, p. p. circumstanced, j. 428.

BETE, to amend, better, AA. viii. 12. BETTE, p. p. applied to fire, GK. 1367.

BETTE, to beat, GC. 148, 158. BET, BETIT, p. t. GG. 626, 680, 989. BETEN, p. t. pl. GK. 1437. BETEN, BETIN, p. p. worked, embroidered (Fr. battu), GK. 78, 1833, 2028. GG. 317.

BEVERAGE, drink, liquor, GK. 1112, 1409. From the first passage, and one in Piers

Plouhman, it would seem to have been the custom to drink, when making a bargain.

BEUEREN, flowing? AA. xxviii. 6. MS. D. The Lincoln MS. reads burely. Jamieson seems inclined to explain it shaking, but I think he is wrong. The word occurs again in the alliterative Morte Arthur.

The bolde kynge is in a barge, and a-bowtherowes, Alle bare-heuede for besye, with beueryne lokkes. MS. Linc. A. 1. 17. f. 91^b.

BEUER-HWED, color of a beaver? GK. 845. Is there any connexion with the preceding word?

BEWES, BEWIS, boughs, AA. iii. 13, x. 10. GG. 468.

- HAMLOUNEZ, pr. t. a hunting term, used of the wiles of the fox, GK. 1708. So in the Boke of St. Alban's, 1496.
- And yf your houndes at a chace renne there ye hunte,
- And the beest begyn to renne, ashartes ben wonte,
- Or for to hanylon, as dooth the foxe wyth his gyle,
- Or for to crosse, as the roo doth otherwhyle.
- And in the older treatise of Twety, MS. Cott. Vesp. A. xii. f. 6^b. "Schow gothe to alle maner of chaces, and couplyng, and dyscouplyng, but if yowre houndes renne to one chace, that is to seye, rusejt, or hamylone, or croisethe, or dwelle, and they conne not put it no fethere, ye shal seye, Ho so, amy, so, venez a coupler." Hence also may be explained the passage so miserably glossed in Hearne's Peter Langtoft, p. 308.

I WENE, AA. xxiv. 4. Manifestly the Saxon adjective gewis, used adverbially. Several writers, and among them I include myself, (Gloss. to Will. and the Werwolf), have erroneously explained this word I know, considering it equivalent to the Germ. ich weiss; but although satisfied about its origin, I still have my doubts whether it was not regarded as a pronoun and verb, by the writers of the fifteenth century.

KENET, hound, GK. 1701. KENETTIS, pl.

AA. iv. 4. Jamieson in his Supplement inserts this word from Sibbald, at the same time professing his ignorance whence the former had derived it, a tolerably convincing proof how carelessly he had read the poem of Sir Gawan and Sir Galaron,

KENLY, boldly, GK. 1048.

 NONEZ, NONS, nonce, GK. 844. The derivations of this phrase suggested by Junius, Tyrwhitt, Thomson, Jamieson, and myself (Gloss. Will. and Werw.) are certainly erroneous, and I have now not the least doubt that the original form was the Saxon for than anes; a conclusion I had formed previous to my noticing the same opinion in a note of Price upon Warton, vol. ii. p. 496.
 NORNE, NURNE, to proffer? GK. 1661, 1669, 1823. NORNE, pr. t. allege? 2443.
 NURNED, p. t. proffered? 1771. The use of this verb seems to be almost peculiar to the author of the poems in MS. Nero A. x. In another passage, I find it thus: An other nayed also, & nurned this cause, "I haf ȝerned & ȝat jokke; of oxen, & for my hyȝes hem boȝt, to bowe haf I mester; To se hem pülle in the plow aproche me by-houeȝ."—f. 57^b.

- SET UPONE SEVIN, or ON SEVIN, a phrase which Jamieson, v. Scheidis, gives up as inexplicable, and yet which is of such frequent occurrence as to deserve more notice than he has chosen to bestow on it. It is in most cases spoken of God, and the original idea seems to imply the creation of the world in seven days, whence it means to set or dispose in order, GG. 1045. Compare the Pystyl of Susan, xxi. 4; and Towneley Mysteries, pp. 85, 97, 118. But in GG. 508, 668, the phrase appears to have acquired another sense, namely, to encounter in battle. - VRYSOVN, GK. 608. Since I wrote the note on this term, p. 317, I have met with two original documents, which confirm my conjecture as to the correctness of the term hourson, and its signification. The first is a receipt from Guillaume de Leiry, embroiderer and armourer, for forty-five frans d'or, paid by Charles of Navarre, "pour la façon d'une cote d'armes, et un hourson tout de velinau vermeil et asur, qu'il a fait de broderie pour le dit seigneur, et à ses armes," dated 8 Oct. 1378; and the second is a warrant from Louis, duke of Orleans, to pay to Colin Pilleur, armourer, the sum of twenty frans d'or, for "un camail d'acier qu'il a baillé et délivré pour notre bassinet, et pour avoir fait garnir notre dit bassinet pardedens de satin, de hourson, et autres estoffes pour garnir notre hernoiz de jambes pardedens de satin," dated 9 July, 1392. The dates of these documents, it will be observed, tend strongly to establish the period at which the English romance was composed.

- P. 100, ix. 5, for ftottyde read ftottyde.
- P. 110, xxv. 9, for medecyes read medecynes.
- P. 111, xxvi. 9, paire is evidently a mistake of the scribe for pai.
- P. 112, xxix. 6, perhaps The is here superfluous.
- P. 115, xxxiii. 1, 2, transpose the points at the conclusion of these two lines.
- P. 123, xlvi. 1, for clenly MS. D. reads kenely.
- P. 127, lv. 6, Yglande, sic MS. for Ynglande.
- P. 131. This Romance is reprinted from the re-impression made at Edinburgh, 4to, 1827, but it was not observed, till too late, that most of the mere errors of the press in the old edition of 1508 were there corrected. The emendations therefore now made are such as escaped the notice of the recent editor, or were neglected by him.
- P. 137, l. 166, for And we should, no doubt, read In.
- P. 138, l. 191, the edition of 1508 reads consing, not cousing.
- P. 141, l. 261, for ye read þe.
- P. 143, l. 300, for mynde (sic edit.) we should read myude.
- P. 161, l. 779, for fen fpeir the editor of 1827 conjectures fen ye fpeir, but I think my own emendation more correct.
- P. 174, l. 1118, for scheth read scheith; the edit. 1508 has schelth.
- P. 178, l. 1227, for led we should perhaps read ledis.
- P. 180, l. 1271, for luffum read luffum.
- P. 181, l. 1299, for That the sense seems to require And.
- P. 181, l. 1300, the edit. 1508 has wounyn, not wounen, and in the next line forloune, not fortonne.
- P. 182, l. 1332, for be hald read behald.
- P. 182, l. 1334, the edit. 1508 has douffipere, which was altered injudiciously in edit. 1827.
- P. 187, l. 9, for ftronge (sic MS.) we should read ftrange.
- P. 194, l. 259, for lzythēt we should read hyžtht.
- P. 196, l. 328, for knyžtt⁹ the sense requires knyžt.
- P. 200, l. 465, G. is perhaps superfluous.
- P. 225, l. 45, for both blyth & blee we should probably read so bright of blee.
- P. 228, l. 125, for eu ye read eu⁹ye.
- P. 229, l. 166, the inverted commas should be placed before Kay.
- P. 240, l. 469, for shoutest read shontest.
- P. 252, l. 231, in the margin, for inviffible read inviffible.

- P. 283, l. 205, for wifn read wifh.
- P. 289, l. 18, the seems to be wanting.
- P. 298^b, l. 62. The name of Gromer Somer Joure would seem to have been taken from the printed Morte d'Arthur, (vol. ii. p. 392, ed. Southey,) and, consequently, prove the poem to be later than the year 1485. The correct reading is Gromer Gromerson, or Gromorssum, as appears from vol. i. p. 231.
- P. 298^r, l. 300. In reference to Gyngolyne, (see p. 347) may be added the title of the romance in the Lambeth MS. 905, f. 73. "A tretys of one Gyngelayne, othirwise namyd by Kyng Arthure Ly beus disconeus, that was bastard son to Sir Gaweyne."

NOTES.

- P. 304, l. 26. A third portion of the same romance, but imperfect at the beginning and end, is preserved in a MS. in Trinity College, Dublin, marked D. 4. 12. It is written in a late hand of the fifteenth century, and commences towards the end of the third passus, and ends in the middle of the twelfth. It occupies forty quarto leaves.
- P. 307, l. 12, for Helie de Borron read Walter Map, and dele the remainder of the sentence.
- P. 310, last line. In addition to the references here given, Jones's Relicks of the Welsh Bards, 4to, Lond. 1794, p. 108, contains a notice of this Christmas play, as performed in Oxfordshire.
- P. 318, l. 30. Consult also Thoms' Notes on Aubrey, in the Anecdotes and Traditions, 4to, 1839, p. 98, published by the Camden Society.
- P. 319, l. 31. In a collection of Welsh arms made in 1560, and printed in Owen's British Remains, 8vo, 1777, Gwalchmai ab Gwyar is said to bear "Quarterly, ermine and ermine, a fess argent," p. 49.
- P. 320, l. 13. An abridgement of this legend may be found inserted in the Chronicle of John of Glastonbury, printed by Hearne, vol. i. p. 77, 8vo, 1726.
- P. 320, l. 27, for sixteenth read fourteenth.
- P. 330, l. 27. In the Roman de Lancelot, vol. iii. f. xl^v^b. Cardueil in Galles is distinguished from Carlyon.
- P. 332, l. 27. Malory's authority is to be found in the Roman de Lancelot, vol. iii. f. cxiii^b, edit. 1513.

- P. 341, l. 11. Since I wrote this note I have found Arthur's expedition to Jerusalem mentioned in one of the interpolated passages of Nennius, ap. Gale, cap. 63. He is stated to have caused a consecrated cross to be made, by which he conquered the Pagans, and of which portions were preserved at Wedale in Lothian. Also in the Roman d'Alexandre, composed by Alexandre de Paris in the twelfth century, he makes Arthur march to the extremity of the East, and erect two golden statues, which were subsequently discovered by Alexander. See De la Rue, Essais sur les Bardes, vol. i. p. 35.
- P. 344, l. 7, for professor read possessor.
- P. 344, l. penult., for at the close of the reign of Henry the Sixth read in the reign of Edward the Fourth.

GLOSSARY.

- P. 371, v. BRAUDED. Add to the reference, xxxv. 2, MS. D.
- P. 376, v. DERFLY. Add here DERUELY, GK. 2334, and dele the word and reference under DERNLY.
- P. 379, v. ESTE. Dele this word and reference.

N.B. The last poem in the Appendix, No. VIII. was discovered too late to be cited in the Glossary, but there are but few words of any obscurity, and most of these appear to be corrupt forms occasioned by the carelessness of the scribe, as in the case of lute, l. 238, and scott, l. 477.

THE END.
